Satisfactory Condition of Affairs—Restoration of Order—Resume of Events.

A greater contrast than that presented by New-York on yesterday and the day before has rarely been afforded. Wednesday was a day of horror, of consternation, of wild confusion; yesterday was one of peace, security and order. The vindication of the law had been so complete, the mob spirit had been so entirely eradicated by the action of the Police and militia that the City has not in years been so orderly and quiet as it has been since midnight of Wednesday. Streets and places which are usually filled at late hours of the night with disorderly characters, were deserted and quiet. Ruffians who are generally to be found at all hours defying the public peace, had slunk into their hiding holes. The change was marvelous and delightful.

Nowhere was it more marked than at Police Head-quarters. At 9 o'clock yesterday morning Superintendent KELSO and Gen. SHALER were convinced that order had been completely restored, and that no further outbreak need be feared. The few remnants of the force which remained on duty in the building were relieved, and the vast edifice in the early hours of yesterday was sepulchrally quiet and excessively dirty. The quiet continued throughout the day, but under the exertions of a large force of charwomen the filth had disappeared by nightfall, the furniture had been returned to its place, and there were no signs of the turmoil of the previous day remaining. During the morning Superintendent KELSO, Inspectors DILKS, WALLING and JAMESON, notwithstanding the exhaustive and continuous labors of the previous twenty-four hours, were yet on duty, and actively engaged in returning the Department to its routine duty. Fifteen hundred of the twenty-two hundred patrolmen attached to the force had been withdrawn from the precincts where their few remaining comrades had been constantly on duty, so that the entire force was as entirely exhausted as its chiefs. The men had earned the rest which was at last accorded them, not only by constant but effective service. Everywhere during the day of disturbance it was noticed that the Police invariably drove the rioters, no matter what was the disproportion of numbers. There was no flinching upon the part of any member of the Police except Patrolman O'GRADY, Sixth Precinct, who was so summarily stripped of his uniform by Superintendent KELSO, and the story in a morning paper that Capt. HELME showed cowardice is pronounced by Inspector WALLING to be "an infamous lie," as Capt. HELME was in his immediate view during the whole of the fight, and he knows that he bravely led his men throughout the conflict.

In actual incidents yesterday was almost a blank at head-quarters. The only affair that made any stir whatever was the removal of the rioter prisoners to the Tombs about 11 o'clock in the morning. They were congregated preparatory to being taken away in the rear room of the detectives, and so many men of ferocious and disagreeable appearance are rarely seen together. All were of unmistakable Irish nationality, all dressed in the coarse garb of the laboring classes, and many were stained with the dried blood which had oozed from their wounds inflicted by the detectives when they were beaten down in the streets on the previous day. Escorted by the detectives under Capt. IRVING, and thirty-five patrolmen under Capt. MCDONNELL, the sixty-two prisoners were marched to the Tombs by way of Houston-street, Broadway, and Franklin, and not to parade them to the general public, but to avoid the chance of an attempt at rescue by going through the Irish districts to the east of Broadway. When the Court-room was reached the prisoners were arraigned before Justice HOGAN, and all were temporarily committed for examination. At a later hour legal hairs being split in their behalf, nine of them were set at liberty for want of sufficient evidence of riotous acts. From these sixty-two prisoners, the detectives took, when they were arrested in the streets, seventy-eight deadly weapons, most of which were pistols, and those having these weapons invariably had several boxes of cartridges. Those not having fire-arms had swords, daggers, sheath-knives, and one fellow, with murder in his heart, had a trowel with all its edges ground sharp, thus converting it into a most terrible instrument of death.

The disarming of these ruffians, occurring as it did early in the day, and being done as it was by the detectives, was the means of saving many lives, as it demoralized the wretches who had armed for the fray, as these ununiformed foes presented a danger that could not be foreseen. There were several others of these armed rioters seized by officers in uniform, among whom was one herculean Hibernian, whose courage had all oozed out of him, so that he trembled in every fibre when arraigned before Inspector WALLING yesterday. He had been taken by Inspector JAMESON, who had wrested a sword from him, while an officer of the Twenty-second Precinct snatched a pistol from his pocket. The prisoner protested that he meant no harm, and was looking for work when he was arrested. The doubting WALLING thought he had queer tools, and assured him that he should be provided with a long job of work in cracking stones up the river. He was locked up at Head-quarters with JOHN B. MCHUGH, No. 280 West Eleventh-street, and JOHN MCHUGH, No. 54 West Houston-street, both of whom were armed, and one of whom, had on his person a list of the names of sixty members of the National Hibernian Volunteers. Both these prisoners will be arraigned at the Tombs Police Court this morning.

Besides these incidents, there was absolutely nothing to disturb the placidity of Head-quarters, except that during the morning Superintendent KELSO was frequently required to assure anxious inquirers that there was no truth whatever in the reports that there had been a disturbance on the Boulevard, in consequence of the discharged workmen who had gone off to engage in the riot returning and claiming their places. Nothing of the kind had occurred, nor had any regiments of militia or detachments of Police been ordered anywhere.

The Scene of the Conflict.

Yesterday morning, on Eighth-avenue, between Twenty-third and Twenty-sixth streets, many curious spectators were gathered to view the houses which had sustained the brunt of the contest. A TIMES attaché, among others, was on the ground early, and visited the dwellings in detail. Before entering, his attention was attracted by the increasing numbers of the visitants of all classes eager to see the spot now become famous in the history of this City. Carriages and open barouches, occupied by ladies and gentlemen, passed slowly up and down the avenue, while those within read aloud the morning papers' accounts of the affray, and pointed out the several places mentioned. Knots and small parties of working men, in holiday clothes, lounged around the store doors and corners, discussing the hair-breadth 'scapes of this one and that, and the mishaps of others.

Mr. AUDLEY, a clerk in the drug-store, corner of Twenty-fourth-street and Eighth-avenue, stated that in his opinion the Eighty-fourth Regiment had had sufficient provocation to fire upon the mob before they did it. In the first place, the men had been stoned and assailed unmercifully by the mob on their way to Twenty-fourth-street. Arrived there they were subjected to still more vigorous attacks. Shots were fired from an upper story of No. 275 Eighth-avenue upon them, and from other houses and roof-tops further up, between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets. Men whose names were not known, deliberately drew revolvers and discharged them at the Orangemen and troops. This gentleman says that he saw a ruffian point a pistol at the Orange Marshal and fire. The ball missed its mark, and the would-be murderer was stricken down by a policeman ere he could repeat his experiment. Again, to show the murderous spirit that animated the breasts of the "innocent crowd," it is sufficient to state that this clerk was likewise a witness to the cold-blooded murder of a poor woman. She foolishly waved her handkerchief by way of encouragement to the members of the lodge as they went by, and a villain stepped up, placed a pistol at her head, and blew her brains out. These are but a few of the facts given by one man.

Another person, T. W. ROCHE, of No. 288½ in the block between Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets, said that he stood in the doorway from the time the procession started until the volley was fired, and saw everything that transpired during that time. In the first place, several shots were fired by persons on the sidewalks at the Orangemen through a gap on the left flank of the line. A man who sought refuge in his store from the rifles of the soldiers bragged of having discharged his revolver three times at the military and their charge. Again he positively affirmed that two Irish girls, dressed in white, kept up a steady fusillade upon the ranks from the upper windows of No. 284½. This was corroborated by the person who keeps a store beneath, Mr. KOEHLER, and Mr. AUGWIN, who keeps a tea-store next door. ROCHE also added that several fire-arms were discharged from the roofs of the houses, two and three doors above his place, and from the crowd one man in particular he observed deliberately draw a Derringer, cock and discharge, and return it to his pocket before the Police could catch him. Besides this use of powder and ball, there were never-ceasing showers of paving-stones and bricks, many of which, as our returns show, did very great execution. Mr. AUDLEY and two other gentlemen emphatically assert that Capt. DOUGLAS, of the Eighty-fourth, gave the men orders to fire after he recovered from the stunning effect of a blow of a brick. They heard him utter the command, and saw the harassed and badly-used men obey it. PATRICK J. MAHER, of No. 286 Eighth-avenue, corroborates the foregoing statements of the protracted and dangerous assaults made by the crowd and individuals from windows and housetops upon the procession. All agree that the fusillade did not come a moment too soon, as the rioters were in large force and preparing to close in upon the troops, wrest their muskets from them and demolish the Orangemen. In proof of this ROCHE informed our reporter that many scoundrels were in the alley leading to the tenement-house along side of the butcher's shop, loading pistols and scolding each other for the failure of this plan. Many young men and women in the vicinity confirmed these details and said that there was a well-known coalition between several gangs of rowdies, who had stationed themselves in the different streets from Twenty-ninth down to Twenty-third, to watch a chance when the flanks of the column should have been exposed in wheeling, and then to leap into the interstices and throw the whole into irremediable confusion. The impatience of hot-headed rioters and women frustrated the plan by bringing out the determined action of the regiment. Many estimates have been given of the numbers of the assailants. From these it has been learned that upward of 5,000 people were armed with different weapons with which to do the bloody work. Their organization was incomplete, and passion rendered their endeavors to do more serious harm ineffectual.

Almost every house in the two blocks between Twenty-sixth and Twenty-third streets has its memento of the fracas in the shape of broken windows, perforated awnings and doors. Some of them have sustained much damage, and many had their doors taken off the hinges by the persons who were striving to avoid the bullets of the militia. The corners of Twenty-fourth and Twenty-fifth streets and Eighth-avenue were thronged with curious men and women, and where the blood had congealed on the sidewalk, or had stained the steps leading to some basement, a discussion would be held on the manner in which the men had been killed, and whether it would have been possible for them to have escaped, had they wished to. It was the general admission that the best thing had been done, and many even went so far as to wish that it had been more complete. The storekeepers whose windows had been riddled by bullets were making an attempt at repairing them by patching up the place with boards, so that in many cases it must have resembled some of the streets of modern Paris.

The Action of the Militia.

The reports in all the newspapers, yesterday, touching the exciting scenes in the Eighth-avenue, where so many lives were lost, were necessarily prepared from hearsay, or at best, under circumstances that were disadvantageous to a correct statement of facts. As considerable dispute and recrimination has already been indulged in by militia officers, who certainly ought to know better, it is only proper to now make a full and clear statement of the movements of the several regiments acting as escort to the Orange procession, in order that the case may be properly understood by the public. When it was ascertained by the Police and military authorities that a large and determined mob had gathered in Eighth-avenue, near the Orange head-quarters, with the apparent purpose of attacking the procession, Brig.-Gen. VARIAN was sent there with the Sixth, Seventh, Ninth, Twenty-second and Eighty-fourth Regiments. On his arrival at the scene of threatened hostilities, there were indications that men on the roofs and in the windows of certain buildings on the east side of the avenue, near Twenty-sixth-street, were preparing to fire upon the Orangemen. Gen. VARIAN detached the right wing of the Seventh Regiment, under the lead of Capt. MOORE'S company, and sent it forward on the west sidewalk, to act as flankers and stationary guards. The orders of the General were that if the suspected men threw stones or other missiles, or fired on the processionists, the men of the Seventh were to at once fire upon them. Gen. VARIAN especially cautioned this flanking party that they were to avoid, if possible, firing on women or children. "If those men use violence," said the General, "use your pieces, and aim well." Capt. SMITH moved his company to the spot designated, and there remained. As the procession moved in front of the right wing of the Seventh several stones and other missiles were hurled from the opposite buildings, when eight or ten of the Seventh men elevated their muskets and fired. At the same moment several missiles were thrown from the sidewalk crowd and a few pistol shots were fired. The Ninth Regiment was then in column, by companies, when, in some inexplicable manner, the men opened fire to the right and left. Scarcely had the volley been fired than the ground held by the Ninth was deserted by them, and the men rushed for shelter to the sidewalks and houses, thereby making it impossible for the wing of the Seventh to maintain its formation. The Eighty-fourth, also, opened fire, and became almost as much demoralized as the Ninth. An evening paper yesterday published what purports to be a statement of Major HITCHCOCK, of the Ninth Regiment, in which he is made to say that the Seventh Regiment were compelled to fire over the heads of the Ninth to reach the crowd in the street. Such is not the fact; for the Seventh did not fire at the street crowds, but at men in the upper windows of the opposite houses. Besides, how could they fire at the crowd over the heads of the Ninth? Major HITCHCOCK also says that he saw the whole thing, as he was in front of his regiment, and then adds that when Sergt. WYATT was killed, he fell across his (the Major's) feet. How these two statements can be reconciled will be difficult to explain to military men. Statements have also been freely made that the losses in the Ninth Regiment are attributable to the Seventh, but it is scarcely necessary to contradict such allegations, as they are manifestly false. That the men of the Ninth and Eighty-fourth Regiments acted hastily and ill-advisedly, in a military sense, in using their muskets without the word of command from their officers, there can be no question. Still it is quite evident that the spattering volley given by these regiments, proving so deadly in its general effect, checked the belligerent tendency of the mob, and probably saved many lives, as in a few minutes more the mêlée would have become general and desperate. The Sixth Regiment also fired on the crowd, being incited thereto by an assault on one of their officers. The Twenty-second Regiment distinguished itself by not firing a shot, as the men received no orders from their officers. This conduct elicited a few words of earnest praise from Gen. VARIAN. That the men of the Seventh were distinctly authorized to fire on occasion, shows the confidence reposed in them by the Brigadier.

The Twenty-second Regiment, Col. PORTER commanding, was retired from duty at the armory in Fourteenth-street at 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon, after having performed thirty-four hours' severe and arduous service. After reaching the Cooper Institute, on Wednesday afternoon, a detachment of the regiment, under command of Capt. COLFAX, was efficiently employed in clearing the streets of rioters. Yesterday morning the regiment marched to Elm Park, at Ninety-first-street, and relieved the Seventy-first Regiment. It remained there several hours.

The Killed and Wounded.

It is estimated by Warden BRENNAN that as many as 25,000 people visited the Morgue yesterday in search of missing relatives, or to gaze with curiosity upon the ghastly spectacle prepared for them. Those in charge of the dead-house were on duty at 6½ A. M., and until the doors of admission were closed to the public the stream of people flowed in a steady volume. The dead bodies, numbering thirty-four in all, were laid in their rude boxes and placed in rows in the yard for identification. As the troops of inquiring people slowly defiled around the corpses of the dead, the scene was impressive and affecting. The first man identified was TIMOTHY SULLIVAN, who was recognized by a female relative, said to be his wife or sister. The feeling seemed to be very marked and bitter, and there was much excitement in and around the Morgue. The wife of PATRICK SLATTERLY, upon recognizing her husband, fainted, and was carried home by her relatives. Of the thirty-four bodies mentioned all have been recognized except three, and twenty-five have been given into the custody of their friends by the Coroners. The remaining three recognized bodies are to be called for by their friends.

Three other bodies at the Morgue awaiting identification, and three more are said to have been recognized by their friends, but our reporter could not learn their names from the Coroner in attendance in the evening. This completes the list of thirty-four bodies reported as received at the dead-house.

PAGE, of the Ninth Regiment; PHILLIP ACKERMAN, aged seventy-three, born in New-York, a retired shoe manufacturer, and residing at the corner of Twenty-fourth-street and Eighth-avenue, shot in the breast on the roof of his residence. A lady named Mrs. MEANEY, residing at the corner of Water and Little streets, shot through the heart and killed instantly. Her body was taken home.

Coroner YOUNG was notified yesterday of the death of CHARLES PETIT, at the corner of Ninth-avenue and Twenty-first-street. Deceased is twenty-two years of age, and born in Virginia. The Coroner was also notified of the death of BENJAMIN FRANKLIN ERSKINE, aged seventeen years, residing at No. 261 West Thirty-ninth-street. The death took place at St. Luke's Hospital, where the wounded man had been removed. A number of the wounded reported yesterday are today to be found in the list of the killed. It is established, however, beyond a doubt that the total of persons injured and wounded by shots and missiles will reach a total of ninety-nine. Much difficulty was experienced in pushing inquiry further than to learn that a certain number of persons were known to be wounded or injured and treated in the different stores in the neighborhood, who upon having their wounds dressed, went to their homes without their names being learned.

At Mr. A. PARKER'S, No. 309 Eighth-avenue, four of the Ninth Regiment had their wounds dressed. One of these persons was Mr. GRIFFIN, a private, struck with a spent ball; Mr. STERN, a private slightly wounded in the back of the head; a man unknown wounded in the shoulder. Other stores were in like manner turned into temporary hospitals.

The flag of the Grand Opera-house waved at half-mast today, in honor of Mr. H. C. PAGE, whose funeral, together with Sergt. WYATT, of the Ninth, will take place next Sunday.

Mr. ACKERMAN, the old gentleman killed on the roof of the house, at the corner of Twenty-fifth-street and Eighth-avenue, was simply viewing the procession in company with a young lady, looking over the breastwork around the roof, which shielded all but his breast. After he was shot he tottered down to the second landing and then fell to the floor. He was seventy-three years of age, a retired shoe manufacturer, and an American, born and raised in New-York, his parents from Rockland County. The funeral will take place today at 7½ A. M.

Fresh Incidents of the Fray.

The graphic description of the scenes and incidents along the route of the Orange procession, given with lifelike faithfulness in yesterday's TIMES, needs no elaboration. But, as is always the case, no two eyes see alike, and the dramatic situation and thrilling circumstances of the tragic pageant. No pen or pencil can picture the entire panorama of events with full exactness, and the various narratives of eye-witnesses will be read with devouring interest. Police Surgeon BEACH, who rendered efficient medical services at the scene of the disaster, and subsequently at the Sixteenth Precinct Station-house, in West Twentieth-street, tells the following story:

He accompanied the Police column under Inspectors WALLING, JAMESON and DILKS, and was near the detachment of Capt. WASHBURNE, of the Ninth Precinct, when the firing commenced. He said that things looked lively as the column reached Twenty-eighth-street. The housetops were crowded, as were all the sidewalks. The windows were black with protruding heads; even the awnings and window-cornices were densely crowded with eager and excited spectators. Most of these seemed to be non-partisan, but a small proportion appeared as malcontents. These (as another person says) were upon the sidewalks and at the cross-streets, and for the most part were evidently armed for the fray with bludgeons, knives, pistols, slung-shots and iron bars, which were concealed in their arm-sleeves or under their coats.

At Twenty-sixth-street, there was an attempt to cheer the Orangemen. This caused a very perceptible agitation in the ranks and among the spectators. Still there was no outbreak.

At Twenty-fifth-street an old boot and tin kettle were thrown down from some roof into the midst of the Orangemen. Other missiles followed, one striking the back of the Orange Grand Marshal. Suddenly the air was filled with brick-bats. Capt. WASHBURNE instantly dashed, at the head of his men, into the solid front of the rioters, who at once resisted. The whack, thud, crack of the clubs upon the rioters' heads could be heard a block off. In the midst of this confusion shots were fired, and stones thrown from the house-tops and windows. Several of the Police and soldiers were struck and fell. The next instant the air was filled with derisive hoots, yells and shouts, both from the men and women. Then came a rattle of musketry, the whizzing of bullets the shivering of glass, and the groans, shrieks and cries of the wounded.

With the utmost difficulty Dr. BEACH reached the prostrate and helpless victims, and to his credit, the writer attests, that he did all that could be done, unaided, and in some cases opposed by the infuriated mob. Undoubtedly several of the wounded would have at once bled to death without this prompt assistance.

JAMES G. HITCHCOCK, of New-Haven, Conn., gives an interesting account. He saw the Police make three charges after the first shots were fired from the houses down into the procession, before the military fired at all in return. The very instant that the first shots were fired by the fellows in the houses, scores of those on the sidewalks, who had previously been noticed to keep their hands in their breasts and pockets, drew out pistols or knives. Swift as thought the volley of the militia followed. Four of the dead fell with loaded pistols in their hands, ready and taking aim at the procession. In the scramble of escaping, many of these weapons were dropped upon the sidewalk, and afterward were picked up by the crowd. The curses and imprecations of these rascals were loud and defiant. They undoubtedly came there to fight, to break the peace, to murder. Hats and coats of all styles were also thrown down. Several of the dead were coatless, and with sleeves rolled up.

EDWARD H. CLARK, M. D., of Omaha, came up-town to look upon the display, not dreaming that there would be any riot. He kept along the sidewalk with the troops, thinking that ample protection and perfect safety would be afforded there. The missiles and shots from the rioters flew before he had any idea of it. He tried to get away, but could not. Women and children were intermingled in the throng. They shrieked and moaned, but could not escape. The crowd surged to and fro, and those in the centre were pushed and almost crushed to death. "Lie down, for God's sake, lie down, all of you!" was shouted by the Police, and they tumbled to the pavement at the very first volley. He said, "I fell in the gutter, near a lamp post. On top of me were two policemen and a woman. I could not breathe. "Let me up; I can't breathe here!" I shouted. "Lay still; for if you get up you won't breathe many times again!" Then came the volley of musketry. The balls cut through the leg of my boot, and one opened the skin on my shoulder. The woman was shot through and through the temple, twice through the fingers, and once through the stomach. Her blood was spattered all over us. As soon as the firing ceased I got up and did what I could for the wounded and dying. I think a great many were shot slightly, and went at once to their homes, and the newspaper list of the wounded does not begin to cover the entire number. I cannot begin to tell how many were bleeding, but many more than you imagine. The military did right to fire. If they had not done so the crowd would have killed many more. But the firing awed them into submission. But oh! how they did curse the Mayor. Several threatened to shoot him if he appeared, and I verily believe they would carry that threat into execution. They were as much exasperated in that direction as they were toward the Orangemen.

A number of citizens, as well as the TIMES reporters, who saw the entire battle between the mob and the Police, make concurrent statements. Inspectors WALLING and JAMESON were at the head of their commands, and leaped in advance among the ruffians. Many hand-to-hand contests took place, in which the most notable bravery was displayed. At one place three brawny villains surrounded Inspector WALLING, but his locust whirled right and left like a flail, and almost simultaneously the three skulls were cracked, and the owners went down. The front rank of officers grasped the prostrate forms, deftly disarmed them, and dragged them to the hollow square, where the prisoners were. Capts. HEDDEN, CAFFREY, HELME and KENNEDEY were prominent in the charge. One six-foot-high desperado struck at Capt. HEDDEN with a club, but the latter dashed away the weapon, and with a tremendous blow sent the assailant sprawling upon his nose. Two dandies, who refused to "move on" and attempted to stand upon their dignity, were seized by Inspector JAMESON, who clicked their two heads together and danced them in among the prisoners as quick as a well-executed Irish jig. One murderous wretch leveled his ugly-looking horse-pistol at the head of an officer, and was about to fire, when another blue-coat clutched him by the neck from behind, and swung him around upon his back with such force as to send the weapon far away upon the pavement, where one barrel exploded.

These encounters were so frequent and rapid that the rowdies seemed amazed, and their courage oozed away.

Mr. DANNENBAUM, proprietor of a dry-goods store on Eighth-avenue, near Twenty-fourth-street, states that while the firing was going on, a stalwart militia officer (he could not tell of what regiment) ran away from his command, and came to the iron-grated door of the store, almost frantic with alarm, and piteously begged to be admitted, which was not acceded to by Mr. DANNENBAUM.

Mr. JAMES E. PRATT states that a large, portly person, about the size and shape of Mr. JAMES FISK, Jr., rapidly "traveled" toward the side entrance of the Grand Opera-house, as soon as the first shot was fired. He was not seen again after that.

The Guard at the Government Buildings.

The Government buildings in Wall-street and vicinity were well guarded during Wednesday night. Superintendent HILLYER, at the Custom-house, made no addition to the usual guard over the building, but enjoined the eight watchmen on duty to exercise close vigilance, and not permit the entrance of strangers after the usual hours for closing. Mr. HILLYER did not deem it necessary to use the precautions which were employed by him on the occasion of the riot in 1863. Then he had large bombs, loaded with forty-second fuses, placed in each window, and ready to be rolled out among the crowd, where they would have burst and caused fearful destruction. Besides these weapons, the marines and sailors in the building had howitzers loaded with grape and canister. The Bank Note Company then occupied the upper portion of the building, and the employes filled tanks with acid, and arranged pumps, so as to throw the chemical upon any crowd who should attempt to ascend the staircase. Had the rioters gained access to the Custom-house on that occasion, they would have met with a reception which would have astonished them. It is proper to say that Superintendent HILLYER has means at his command for the defense of the Custom-house against assault which are equally as effectual as those he employed in 1863.

The guard at the Sub-treasury was increased on Wednesday night by the addition of nearly all the clerks. Every avenue was closed, and any attempt to enter would have been met with a volley which would have astonished the rioters.

At the Post-office, the guard consisted of two companies of the Sixty-ninth Regiment and a platoon of Police from the First Precinct. Postmaster JONES was on duty in the building all night, as also were the Superintendents of the various Divisions, and the Assistant Postmasters. The force of clerks on duty embraced veterans of the late war, who have not yet forgotten how to do execution with muskets, and they would have been found good marksmen had their services been called upon.

The Rioters at the Tombs.

Lively excitement was created about the Tombs, yesterday, by the appearance there of Capt. MCDONALD and Sergt. DOUGLASS, with a squad of Police and detectives acting as escort to fifty prisoners, who were in custody on a charge of being implicated in Wednesday's disturbances. The alleged offenders were marched into the Police Court-room, and were arraigned separately before Justice HOGAN. The impression conveyed by the looks of the most of them was an unfavorable one, and created a wish that some of them might be punished. They were mostly characterized by rough and hardened Celtic-looking faces, on which lawlessness and religious hatred were plainly stamped. There was a general feeling of approbation at their capture and their arraignment, although some uncertainty prevailed when the question of the probability of their trial and punishment was brought under discussion. The belief was strong, however, that the District-Attorney and other local law officials would hardly dare to defy public feeling by allowing the guilty ones to escape sentence. STEPHEN J. MEANY, of the Irish Democrat, who offered his services as counsel to the Hibernian rioters gratis, was present in the Court-room.

The following statements were made by the Police in making their complaints:

DANIEL H. FLYNN was arrested by Officer IRA S. GARLAND, of the Twelfth Precinct, while in the act of flourishing a razor which he held in his hand, there being a large crowd around at the time. He was held for trial.

THOMAS WALLACE was arrested by Detective Officer ELDER. In the possession of the prisoner were found three packages of cartridges and a box of percussion caps. The prisoner was surrounded by a dense crowd at the corner of Broadway and Fourteenth-street, and was cut and bleeding, as if recently engaged in fighting. He was held.

MARTIN TOYLET, arrested by Detective FARLEY in Mott-street, had a loaded revolver on his person and was near a crowd. Held to answer.

JOHN MONTGOMERY was running away from the crowd at Hibernian Hall. He was discharged.

JOHN J. DORIAN was found with a trowel under his coat. He explained that he was a mason

Matters in Porto Rico—Important Misstatements—Resignation of Commissioner Hennens—Upon the Island Politics—Habana Journalism—Matters at Santiago—The Death of Colonel Rubi.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, July 8, 1871.

The Republican Association Party of Porto Rico, which calls itself the Moderate Party, but which shares in reality the ideas held by Don Cabana under cover of GENERAL has gained a most decisive victory over the ultras on so-called Conservatives, the Radical element, has taken surprising even among the reformists. The following extract from the letter of a Commissioner that to Spain is entitled, for the Spaniards elected but one man, Gen. Salm, Ex-Captain-General of the Island, and their candidate for Mayor of the district of the capital, where the Spaniards are in a majority, owing to the large number of officials and ex-officials there residing. It was stated that Gen. Palmaola had a row with the Volunteers and left the island in consequence of officials and ex-officials are quartered there, every soldier who has served in the ranks of the army. The following appears to be the correct story: Since the discovery of the Virgin of Cobre conspiracy, about five hundred persons, many of them Spaniards, have been arrested and about seventy have been executed, and whom over half were Spaniards and eleven Spanish Volunteers. One of the latest arrests was that of JUAN COLAS, a rich and respected planter, as proof being alleged to exist, and the Cuban leaders could have done exactly the same thing had they been more prudent; cool and patriotic, and less ambitious. The Porto Rican radical leaders, with great foresight, preferred the title of a Deputy to the Spanish Cortes to that of a Colonel of General of Revolutionists. Instead of burning plantations, they sent and enlighten the ignorant; instead of shouting "Death to Spain," and making a display, they say "Long live Spain and Porto Rico," while every one knows that the Radical Party more or less passes makes the left the power, and will not easily relinquish it. The so-called idiots (nuknowns) must decide to join either one party or the other, appointing Col. CASINAL a first favorite in San Juan, and Judge Advocate. This allayed all hostile demonstrations, conservative Gaceta was established in the Radical Party necessarily a fact. BASE-BALL.

Mutual vs. Haymaker—The Mutuals the First Club to Lose a Championship Match.

No club of the ten championship nines of the country started out this season under more apparently auspicious circumstances than the combination, nine of the Mutual Club of this City. They had confessedly the strongest nine of individual players, and having been taught by experience the folly of hoping to be successful without judicious training and discipline, they opened the season under the implied promise to the Club supporters that the new régime was to be marked by a special avoidance of the errors of the previous season's management. Well, the nine opened play, and their first grand match was with the new and strong nine of the Haymaker Club at Troy. Like a brilliant rocket, the Mutuals went up the river, astonished the natives with a brilliant display, and marked their inaugural match of the season with a noteworthy victory. Flushed with their success, and erroneously imagining that with such a strong corps of players of note, they could ignore the fatigue and annoyances of regular training, they entered upon a series of ratè-money contests, first with inferior playing nines and then with nines not thoroughly organized, and of course met with a degree of success that only confirmed them the more in their previous notion that they possessed an invincible nine. But they were doomed to have a rather painful awakening to the real state of the case, and the first notice they received was at the hands of this self-same Haymaker nine, who, after getting pretty well into practice, came down to the City and polished off the "invincibles" by the score of 26 to 10. This lesson should have been profited by, but it was not, and so things went on in the same old way, until the Mutuals lost their prestige of being the coming champions, and within the past three weeks the crack nine of the Metropolis has gradually fallen step by step to a fourth-rate position in the ranks of the championship contestants. For proof of the fact we have but to refer to the accompanying list of defeats:

May 18	Mutual vs. Haymaker	10 to 25
June 22	Mutual vs. Kekiongo	3 to 5
June 23	Mutual vs. Athletic	9 to 10
July 3	Mutual vs. Haymaker	16 to 37
July 4	Mutual vs. Eckford	0 to 7
July 5	Mutual vs. Cleveland	5 to 6
July 10	Mutual vs. Olympic	13 to 16
July 13	Mutual vs. Haymaker	7 to 9
Total		55 to 110

In addition to this disastrous record for a first-class nine, the contest of yesterday, with its defeat of the New-York nine, ends the series with a victory for the Troy club, and they are the first club to earn a match of the championship series, best three out of five, all the other matches recorded as victories being illegal triumphs.

The game of yesterday was witnessed by a large crowd of deeply-interested spectators, and so confident were the Mutual betting crowd of the success of their nine that they invested at odds of $100 to 60 on the Mutuals. Their chagrin may be imagined when they saw the game terminate as it did, with a victory for the Haymakers, and their only poor revenge of gratifying their ill-temper at the expense of the visiting Club, for at the close of the contest some of the members of the Club attacked those of the Haymaker Club, and but for the protection of the Police the Haymakers would have been roughly used. The officers of the Club interposed, but the "heelers" were bound for mischief. This is the first time Union Grounds have been disgraced by such a scene, and it is to be hoped that the Club will promptly punish those of their members—but two we believe—who participated in the attack on the Troy nine, for it is to their pecuniary interests as well as for the good name of their organization that it should be done.

Mr. Field, of the Evangelist.

Rev. Dr. FIELD, editor and proprietor of the staid old Presbyterian organ, the Evangelist, has heretofore stood up manfully for honest City government. The Presbyterian denomination are sound to the core on that question. The Evangelist has, with all the other papers not controlled by the Ring, been for a long time demanding an honest and clear statement of the City debt and City financial management, so that the public may know where we stand. The only clear and comprehensive statement of the City and county debt and financial management that has for years been made public was the report to the Council of Political Reform by DEXTER A. HAWKINS, Esq., and published in full in the TIMES of June 30. In that report Mr. HAWKINS states that the figures are all official, having taken them from the reports of the Controller of the City and county and the messages of the Mayor for the last thirteen years, excepting the year 1869, when no reports were made. The facts stated in that report are so astounding that it appeared to many thinking citizens that they could not possibly be true, and since the report was made a careful investigation of the various reports of the Controller and of the Mayor from year to year, and the accounts at the City Hall, so far as they could be got at, has been made, and Mr. HAWKINS' figures have been found to be entirely correct, according to the official reports and the books. The floating debt he does not pretend to state, because no one except the Ring has as yet the means of determining what that is. A reader of the Evangelist and a gentleman of similar religious faith to Rev. Dr. FIELD requested him to publish that report, or the substance of it, showing the much-desired and long-asked-for facts, in the Evangelist; but to his astonishment it was declined, and he was informed that instead thereof Rev. Dr. FIELD was on the point of coming out with a long article bolstering up the Ring, who are now and have for the last three years been plundering the City Treasury of at least $25,000,000 a year over and above what they show any honest or fair return to the public for.

Now if Dr. FIELD is still, as he has heretofore for years been, in favor of an honest City Government and a clear and fair statement, as required by law, of the condition of our finances, he will not longer refuse to give the many thousand readers of the Evangelist an opportunity to get from its columns the facts stated in Mr. HAWKINS' report in regard to our City debt and the management of our City and County finances.

A TAX-PAYER AND VOTER OF THE TWENTY-SECOND WARD AND READER OF THE EVANGELIST.

The Tammany Ring and the "Evangelist."

From the Nation, July 13.

The City Ring has done a pretty good stroke of business during the week in procuring the publication of an apology for them in the New-York Evangelist, the highly-respectable organ of the Presbyterian body. Nobody who knows anything of the editor will doubt that he published it in perfect good faith, but it was nevertheless an act of singular indiscretion. It was the result, we learn, of an evening's conversation in his own house with Judge HILTON, whom the Evangelist pronounces a good man, but who, good or bad, has shown remarkable facility during the last two or three years in acting with some outrageously and notoriously bad men, and from whom, therefore, it would be absurd to expect a fair statement of the condition of the City Government under the Ring in an evening's chat. There are certain facts about the Ring which admit of no denial. As, for example, that its members have grown enormously rich in two years without being engaged in any legitimate business calculated to bring in large returns; that various misappropriations of large sums of public money and jobs have been proved against them; that large sums of money which pass into their hands have disappeared and have not been accounted for; that they for two years persisted in refusing to publish any accounts whatever; that they corrupt the Legislature of this State and two of its Judges. It is no answer to these charges to say that the City Government is improving in their hands, that our Parks are better kept, or our streets better paved. That might satisfy a French Atheist or a Roman pagan; it ought not to satisfy "professing Christians" in America. It is not enough for us that the Government is efficient—we have to see if we can that it is pure, that honest men administer it, and that neither its honors nor profits go to knaves, or ruffians, or whoremongers. Civilization demands this of us, and we owe it above all to the next generation not to give up trying for it, however wearisome the task may be. We may be thankful that TWEED and SWEENY are no worse, but we cannot afford to pardon them for being so bad. Such men cannot be forgiven, no matter how the parks are kept, if we mean to keep up the semblance of a moral standard in politics. Of course, we understand many good people's being weary of the denunciation of the Ring kept up by the New-York TIMES, but then we do not see how moral, much less religious, men can find fault with that paper on any other grounds than those of taste or policy. We think, for our own part, the persistence and pluck it has shown have been deserving of the highest praise, and if anybody finds its iteration tiresome, it is the theme which is to blame. The one good and sufficient reason for denouncing the Ring every day is that the Ring is every day appropriating the public money, or debauching the public conscience. We used ourselves, in like manner, to be frequently requested to let BUTLER alone, at a time when BUTLER was every day trying some new trick in Congress, or making some effort to demoralise the public out-of-doors.

A Warning to Travelers.

I wish to warn the public, through your columns, against one PHELPS, a ticket-agent in the Erie office on the corner of Broadway and Twenty-third-street. On Tuesday I called upon him to secure state-rooms on the Fall River line. I asked him directly if I could secure rooms of him on the boat sailing on Thursday. He replied as directly that I could. I told him the number I desired, and their location, and he booked my name, &c., in the customary manner. Then he handed me checks for tickets, but no checks for state-rooms. I asked for explanation, and received this: That he had secured the rooms, and I should pay for them and secure the keys on the boat when I presented the checks for the tickets at the Captain's office. Today I presented the checks, as directed, and was astonished at the word that there were no state-rooms secured for me, and further, none to be had. Consequently, two ladies, entirely unused to "roughing it," have to go to Boston tonight sitting in the uneasy cabin-chairs. The agent evidently perpetrated this contemptible fraud upon me for the purpose of getting his paltry percentage on the tickets sold.

Freedmen on the Louisiana Plantations.

Occasionally we find more encouraging reports of the operations of the freedmen in leading Southern papers than the great majority of journals in that section are willing to publish. We quoted, a few days ago, such an article from a Georgia paper. Previous to that we had a similar from the New-Orleans Picayune. Today, we give the subjoined from the New-Orleans Times, of Thursday morning last:

"The system of labor on our plantations has been so organised as to produce a condition of general contentment and good feeling, such as few would have anticipated in the years following the war. The habits of the freedmen have greatly changed, and the planters have learned to adapt themselves to the new conditions and to recognize the necessity and policy of new rules to control their relation with their employes. The mutual distrust which once prevailed has disappeared. The negroes are recognized as entitled to all the privileges of equal members of a society of equal legal rights. Their rights to good wages, such as no other agricultural laborers in the world receive; to prompt payment and fair dealing; their claim to educate their children, to attend church and public meetings; to be furnished with the best and most wholesome food, and to spend their money as they may desire, are recognized to the fullest extent, and the planter finds it to his interest to encourage and promote their enjoyment of these privileges of freemen. Those who, while rigorously enforcing their contracts, and punctually and even fastidiously keeping their engagements with their freedmen, lend every aid and facility to the negro, who aspires to rise, and conducts himself in the manner of the decent of the white race, find their great profit and interest therein. They have no difficulty in obtaining and keeping labor. Hence many of our planters have found it a good investment to build churches and school-houses on their plantations. Nearly all of them have established small stores at which the negroes on the plantations can be supplied with such necessaries, comforts, or luxuries as they may need or affect. It has been found very important and useful to provide larger and better cabins for their accommodation, and allow truck or garden patches, which they can cultivate during their leisure moments. As long as these demands are satisfied, and good wages promptly paid, we are satisfied that the freedmen will prefer to remain on the plantations, where they are settled, and may be calculated upon for regular and good labor. The only serious trouble and disorganizer is politics. If it were not for the intrigues and interferences of those wretched demagogues who infest the South, and depend for their advancement upon the votes and delusion of the negroes, and who go from plantation to plantation to organize political clubs and stimulate them to hostility to their only friends and employers, the negro population of the South would, in a few years, become one of the happiest and best conditioned peasantry in the world."

Burglaries in Newark—A Robber Shot.

A number of burglaries have occurred at Newark lately, and night before last two houses were entered by robbers. Mr. POINIER, living on Johnson-avenue, was awakened about 3 o'clock by a noise in his room, and starting up saw a man at the opposite end of the room strike a taper. He took up a double-barreled shot-gun, which stood by the bedside, and fired both barrels at the thief. The man leaped from the window and ran some distance, when he fell exhausted from loss of blood. Two men heard his groans, and going to him took him to the Station-house, where his wounds were dressed. One arm was filled with shot, and so badly mangled as to make amputation necessary. Mr. POINIER identified the man as the one at whom he had shot, both from the character of his wounds and from his face, which he had been enabled to see by the burning match.

About 1 o'clock an attempt was made to enter the house of Mr. AARON WARD, on Clinton-avenue. Mr. WARD went down-stairs in pursuit of the thieves, but they had flown. They had bored through the shutters on the lower story, and were engaged when alarmed in cutting the wires of the mosquito-netting which had been left in the window.

Thieves completely ransacked the vacant house of Mr. KINNEY, on Broad-street, on Tuesday night.

THE KINSMAN ESTATE.

Kinsman vs. Kinsman.—The uncle of the plaintiff, David Kinsman, died some three years ago, leaving a will made on his death-bed, by which his estate, some $75,000, was divided among a large number of persons, some of whom, it is said, the deceased had previously shown no interest in whatever. The nephew, who had expected the estate to come to him, contests the validity of the will in a partition suit, claiming that it was made after the testator's mind had become impaired. The complaint was dismissed substantially by default, and the case yesterday came up on a motion to open the default and allow the case to be tried by a jury on issues to be framed. The Court reserved its decision.

Mr. Devlin for plaintiff; Mr. Hull for defendant.

Before Judge Barnard.

INSANITY AND DEBT.

In re William Hoffman.—On the 1st of January last, Mr. Hoffman formed a partnership with two of his clerks, and, it is charged by his creditors, proceeded, by false representations of the capital of his firm, to buy goods to the amount of $125,000, which he at once sold off, arranging his credits so that all would come due in May. He was arrested on affidavits charging these misrepresentations, and proceedings were taken in bankruptcy against him. His brothers took proceedings to have him declared a lunatic, and the Commission declared him to have been a lunatic for six months past. His wife was made his custodian, and his property directed to be applied in discharge of his debts. Meanwhile he continued under arrest in the civil suits. A motion was yesterday made to have him given up to his wife on the ground that his health was suffering from his confinement. The creditors oppose his release, and yesterday a preliminary objection was taken that the Court could not discharge the prisoner on the ground of lunacy; that they could not do it by the common law, and that the statute provided a special mode for ascertaining such lunacy, which must be rigorously followed, and which in this case had not been followed, and that even if this practice had been regularly followed the Court could only transfer the prisoner to the State Lunatic Asylum. The Court reserved its decision on this point.

THURSDAY, July 13—P. M.

The sales of Gold fell below 112 ₱ cent. this afternoon. The early sales in the Gold Room were at 112¾@112¼ ₱ cent., and the sales of $1,000,000 by the Treasury were at 112.97@112 ₱ cent., on offers to buy of $9,225,000 in the aggregate. The market was influenced by a large demand for our Public Funds for transmission abroad, and the lowering of the Bank of England rate of Interest this morning to 2 ₱ cent. The Foreign Exchanges were also favorably affected, and Sight Bills on London were quoted at 110¾@110¼ ₱ cent., net. The 60 days' rate 110¼@110¼ ₱ cent. The Public Funds of the United States advanced in London today, the 10-40s 5 ₱ cents. to 91¼ ₱ cent., the highest quotation for this Stock yet made on the other side. The Funds here were steady, notwithstanding the decline in Gold, and the 5-20s of 1867 left off 112¾@112¼ ₱ cent., or full ¼ ₱ cent. above Gold, or ½ ₱ cent., counting the accumulation of Interest.

On the Stock Exchange the speculation is not active in the New-York or Western Roads, but the market in the forenoon manifested considerable firmness in prices, on a comparatively small offering of Cash or time Stock. The best prices were scarcely maintained to the close of the day, and after the late Boards the following quotations were made, as compared with Wednesday night:

NEWS OF THE DAY.

EUROPE.

The French Government has sent an agent to England, to endeavor to effect a modification of the treaty of commerce of Jan. 23, 1860. Gen. L'ADMIRAULT, Military Commander in Paris, has ordered the theatres, cafés and other places of public resort that they must closed at midnight, as was formerly the case. The representatives from the occupied districts urge M. THIERS to anticipate the future payments of the indemnity to Germany. It is said negotiations to that end have been opened. The Orleans Princes are about to pay a visit to M. GUIZOT. The Tuileries gardens will shortly be opened to the public. The effective strength of the French Army is 230,000 men. Baron HAUSSMANN is a candidate for office at the municipal elections. It is rumored that the Duke DE BROGLIE will succeed M. FAVRE in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and that M. ANCEL will take charge of the portfolio, now held by M. LARCY. M. DE SAINT HILAIRE will replace M. JULES SIMON in the Ministry of Public Instruction. The differences between the Egyptian Government and the French Consul-General have been referred for settlement to the French Cabinet. The Spener Gazette says that regular diplomatic representation to France is postponed until after the complete evacuation of French territory by the German armies. A Customs conference of delegates from all European States, to meet in Berlin, is proposed.

GENERAL.

In the Connecticut Senate, yesterday, the bill repealing the Usury laws was passed by a nearly unanimous vote. In the House the bill consolidating the New-York and New-Haven and Hartford and New-Haven Railroads was passed by 129 to 85.

A break occurred in the Wyoming Canal yesterday, near Wilkesbarre, filling the Enterprise and Burroughs collieries with water. No person was injured. The break, which extends ninety feet, surface measurement, will be repaired in a week, but the mines will not resume work in less than two months.

At the Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., yesterday, the following honorary degrees were conferred: Master of Arts—Bankson T. Morgan, George R. Fairbanks. Doctor of Divinity—Rev. Giles H. Deahon, of Meriden, Conn.; Rev. Geo. M. Hill, of Burlington, N. J.; Rev. Isaac P. White, of Newport, R. I. Doctor of Laws—Rev. Noah Porter, President elect of Yale College; Hon. Wm. D. Simpson, Judge of the United States Court; Hamilton F. Smith, Professor in Harvard College.

The steam-ship City of Port-au-Prince, from New-York for Port-au-Prince, was wrecked on the 21st of June on Mayaguan, Bahama Islands. All the crew were saved, and fifteen of them have arrived at Philadelphia.

A man named EDWARD WHITTIER, a shoemaker, committed suicide on Wednesday evening, in Lowell, Mass., by cutting his throat. He was one of a party of English emigrants who arrived that day, and was discouraged at not finding employment. He was forty-seven years old. He leaves a wife and six children.

The celebration of the 12th of July in Quebec was confined to an individual display of emblems, and a dinner was given in the evening at Masonic Hall by the members of the Orange lodges in honor of the day. A good deal of excitement prevailed about the riots in New-York.

Dr. MILLER, a member of the Connecticut Legislature from Enfield, while speaking in the House on Wednesday afternoon, was seized with a spasm of the heart and fell to the floor. The House immediately adjourned.

In the Educational Convention at Winchester, Va., yesterday morning, WALTER R. ABBOTT was elected President of the Convention for the ensuing year. Papers were read by Profs. T. H. WILLIAMS and H. ESTILL. At the evening session Prof. JOHN MINOR, of the Virginia University, in an address, took strong ground in favor of Biblical instruction in all the schools.

Delegates have arrived at Cape Island, N. J., from New-York, Philadelphia, Wilmington, Del., Baltimore, Newark and Lynn, Mass., to attend the semi-annual meeting of the Morocco Manufacturers' National Exchange.

Miss ANTHONY spoke in San Francisco on Wednesday evening on the power of the ballot and of the Press. Her remarks on the case of Mrs. FAIR were received with a storm of hisses, inducing her to promptly change the subject.

A company of Mormon immigrants, numbering 300 persons, English, Scotch, Danish and Welsh, arrived at Salt Lake on Wednesday evening, and were escorted into town by the Mormon Bishops, BRIGHAM YOUNG being absent in the northern part of the Territory.

A Radical Press Convention is in session in New-Orleans.

The Viaduct Railroad—Will It Pay?

Is the proposed Viaduct Railroad a practicable scheme, and is it likely to return a fair profit to the original shareholders? These two questions are often in the mouths of people who are invited to subscribe toward the undertaking. The Directors, however, have, for some mysterious reason, a strong objection to hearing these questions put. We have ventured to suggest that they ought to be answered, and for this crime the advertisement of the Viaduct Railroad has been withdrawn from our columns. We trust that we shall be able to survive this cruel blow; and if, as many indications appear to suggest, the Viaduct Railroad is only another device for filling the pockets of a few at the expense of the many, we are rather glad that we are not asked to advertise the project in these pages. At any rate, we cannot consent to the theory that a newspaper ought to be bought by advertisements. Part of our business is to publish advertisements, but it is not part of our business to sell our editorial columns over the counter. The Directors of the Viaduct Railroad, like the Tammany Ring, evidently think that the first use of advertisements is to buy the support of newspapers, or at least to induce them to keep silence. This is in itself a bad sign, because an honest undertaking will bear investigation, and does not need the aid of puffs. At any rate, we must continue to make those plain suggestions about the Viaduct Road which we saw reason to offer before the Directors ordered us to cease publishing their advertisement.

It is quite evident that the Viaduct Road is the most costly of all the schemes yet devised for giving us increased railway facilities. The exact route is still kept a secret, but no matter through what streets it may pass, it is clear that an enormous sum of money will have to be paid for property, for compensation, damages, and other charges of a like character. When a railroad company requires a man's house, the price of that house is suddenly found to go up in the market, and so it will be wherever the Viaduct Road may pass. An underground road would have avoided all, or nearly all, such expenses as these—which, perhaps, is one reason why an under-ground road was not chosen. Unquestionably there must be room for jobbery in any undertaking in which TWEED, SWEENY and the valiant HALL are concerned, and they are at the head and front of this Viaduct Railroad scheme. Then, again, the cost of constructing such a railroad as that proposed must be great beyond present calculation. The Tribune, which is one of the corporation papers, has told us, no doubt upon good authority, that three hundred and forty bridges are to be built over the thoroughfares of the City—in fact, that one-third of the road is to run over bridges. An architect must be very "green" who does not contrive to make a very good thing out of a contract to build even one bridge—but 340! Why it is a prospect more dazzling than ever illuminated the dreams of the most ambitious of architects. And then, moreover, these bridges are all to be of the "Saracenic" order,—that, we suppose, being deemed the most appropriate to a commercial City in the Nineteenth century. There are to be two little arches for foot traffic, and a larger one for carriages and other vehicles—so that as much of the roadway is to be blocked up as possible. If the whole plan had purposely been made as expensive as possible, no better style of railroad could have been chosen.

The City puts down $5,000,000, and the Directors subscribe another million. This sum will scarcely cover the preliminary costs—certainly will not suffice to buy up much property, or settle many claims for damages. We may be sure that such of the Directors as are owners of property along the route will take care that their own interests do not suffer. Their houses will not be sold for less than their full value. The six millions already answered for will be but as a drop of water compared with the Atlantic Ocean—the bulk of the money the general public are expected to supply. Now it is almost certain that in so extravagant a project as this, the original shareholders will never see a cent of interest for their money, even if they are lucky enough to get any of the principal back again. There will be call after call, until the original shareholder is tired out, and then he will be glad to get rid of his shares at a discount. The money subscribed at first will all be sunk in claims for damages and so forth. The real expense of constructing the road will then only begin. Let anybody who is disposed to invest his money in the road ask an architect to give him a rough idea of the cost of such a line, including the 340 bridges. The intending speculator will soon be anxious to keep clear of the scheme. Consider the traffic which will be necessary to pay a proper interest on the money spent on the road! No line could accommodate it, even if there were the traffic to accommodate. If such a road is ever built, and we do not believe it will be, years would pass before the most modest interest could be paid. And yet, without even any proper information being laid before the public, people are expected to rush into the brand new office in Broadway, and invest in a railroad which is almost as visionary in its character as a railroad to the moon. Those who do invest in such a project—unless, like most of the Directors, they see a sly way of making it pay—must have considerably more money than brains.

The Ringleaders of the Riot.

That OAKEY HALL and his tribe of Bohemians, whom he supports out of the City taxes, did undoubtedly help to incite the extreme Irish party to commit a riot on Wednesday, cannot be denied. There were, however, others engaged in the same game, and thus far they have been allowed to escape scot-free. Considering that we were thus threatened with a terrible riot, and that several lives were actually lost, is it not the duty of the authorities to take some steps for the punishment of the guilty parties? Look, for instance, at the following notices:

A. O. H. NO. 21.—A SPECIAL MEETING OF the above lodge will be held at Washington Hall, One Hundred and Twenty-sixth-street and Third-avenue, THIS (SATURDAY) EVENING, at 8, for enrolling members for the H. N. Volunteers, to participate in their Target Excursion early next week. All true Irishmen are requested to attend. By order.
HUGH CUNNINGHAM, President.
HENRY GIBENY, Secretary.

A. O. H. NO. 17.—THE OFFICERS AND MEMbers are notified to attend a special meeting on SATURDAY, at 8 o'clock sharp, at the Constitution Hall, corner of Twenty-second-street and Third-avenue, to receive arms and drill for their coming excursion that is to take place in a few days. All true-hearted Irishmen are invited to come and enroll their names. JAMES CLARKIN, President.
FRANCIS O'HARA, Secretary.

There is scarcely any attempt to conceal the real meaning and object of these announcements. That signed JAMES CLARKIN is too plain for a child to misunderstand—all "true-hearted Irishmen" are invited to attend for the purpose of "receiving arms and drill." The Police knew perfectly well what this meant. The "true Irishmen" in question were to be supplied with the means of committing a breach of the peace. The leaders are liable to prosecution, and we would now ask if the authorities mean to prosecute them? The Mayor has had time to get the shaking out of his knees, and will perhaps give some minutes' consideration to the subject.

A Bad Day for Erie.

The decision of Judge BLATCHFORD, which we published and briefly commented on yesterday, puts a stop in one direction to the most remarkable series of frauds ever attempted. Now that there is a certainty of justice being practically administered, it is worth while to glance back at the history of the conspiracy which has finally been exposed and checked. The parties who have been injured in this affair were stockholders of the Erie Railroad. They had purchased in good faith what they supposed to be valid and negotiable evidence of their shares in the property of that road. In order, however, to realize the use of the right thus purchased in this country, it became necessary to have their stock registered at the Farmers' Loan and Trust Company in this City. The stock having been presented, came, in the course of the transaction, into the office of the Erie Railroad Company. While in this office a sham suit was instituted by members of the Erie Ring, an attachment was procured, and the stock was seized by the Sheriff. When, therefore, the agents of the rightful owners of the stock applied for it, they were told that it had passed from the custody of the Company into the clutches of the Sheriff of the County of New-York, and could only be obtained by the adjudication of the suit, in the progress of which it had been seized. The suit was, thereupon, properly defended, and, of course, proved to be based upon no foundation of facts.

It was dismissed, and the property was released. When, however, the owners of the stock again applied for their property, they found that the conspirators who had instituted the first suit had used the time thus secured to resort again to the State Courts, and that in pursuance of an order which has long since become of infamous notoriety, both on account of the person by whom, and the place from which it was issued, their stock had been again seized, this time by a "receiver," Mr. COLEMAN. Astounded and indignant at the facility with which they found their efforts to regain what honestly belonged to them baffled by the Courts of justice, they summoned their defrauders to meet them in the United States Court, where it was known that, pending the trial, their property would at least be secure from further transfer. In the presence of this tribunal, where the Erie chiefs found themselves at once reduced to the position of ordinary citizens, recourse was had again to the insolent fraud and treachery which are the natural weapons of Messrs. GOULD and FISK. At first it was determined to defy the Court, and to refuse to produce the books necessary to the proper development of the case. The attempt was met by the peremptory exercise of those powers of the Courts which these gentry had apparently supposed to exist solely for their benefit, and in no wise for their restraint. Mr. GOULD was offered the alternatives of obeying the call of the Court or going to prison, and he decided not to go to prison. The evidence having thus been secured, the end was approaching: and, to avoid this end, the Erie rascals had recourse to another trick. They endeavored to deprive the property in the hands of their receiver (they fondly regarded him as still their servant) of all value by issuing upon it three million dollars of bonds, exchanging those bonds for thirty thousand shares of stock, and registering this stock, leaving the stock in the receiver's hands the mere lifeless, worthless corpse of property. It is this last fraud that Judge BLATCHFORD'S decision has brought to grief. This "spollation," as he plainly calls it, he decrees must be made good, either by providing for the legitimate registration of the stock in the hands of the receiver, or by pecuniary compensation. He upsets the theory on which the Erie men act, that Mr. COLEMAN is still their agent, and declares that, by the transfer of this suit to the United States Court, he has become the officer of that Court, the stock in his possession is constructively in the custody of the Court, and any interference with it will be sure to be treated as interference with the dignity and powers of the Court.

We pointed out yesterday the significance of this defeat of the Erie Ring, coming on the same day with the blow struck by outraged public sentiment at that twin enormity the Tammany Ring. What Messrs. GOULD and FISK can do before a just Court, we do not undertake to foretell. But it will seem to most observers that the rascals have nearly reached the end of their rope, and that they will soon be obliged to make restitution.

An Organ-Grinder's Grievance.

Signor MANTON MARBLE, who turns the crank of that servile organ of the "Ring," the World, makes a most piteous complaint against his employers for the way in which he was treated by them in the matter of the Orangemen's celebration. He claims, and as we think, justly, that however foolish and ridiculous they might choose to make themselves in that affair, they had no business to make him and his organ the laughing-stock of the town. They should have agreed among themselves what tune they wanted played before they gave him his orders, and not exposed him to the jeers of the crowd for playing the wrong tune at the wrong time. If they wanted "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning," they should have said so and stuck to it; or if they preferred "Croppies Lie Down," well and good, so long as that was the distinct understanding. It made no difference to MARBLE, as he candidly says, which tune he played, so long as he got his quota of pennies. "We would have supported with equal zeal," says the World in its leading article of yesterday, "and from the same motives, the policy substituted at the last moment, if it had been adopted with foresight and deliberation as the wisest course suited to the exigency." Of course it would. The World has already given its masters of the "Ring" ample proof of its fidelity (while under pay) for nearly a year past. It has praised as honest men and statesmen the very men who, before its engagement with them, had been denounced in its columns as swindlers and thieves. There was, therefore, no excuse for the shabby trick by which the justly-aggrieved "organ" was suffered to expose itself to the scorn and contempt of its readers in its treatment of the Orange difficulty. It is not to be wondered at that the World is forced, for once, into the spasmodic resolve of speaking its real sentiments. "We can think of no more wholesome rule in a great emergency than to express our real sentiments. It is our opinion, then, that this whole business of looking after the Orange procession has been botched. It is our deliberate judgment that the City authority and the State authority (especially as both belong to the same political party) ought to have consulted with each other in advance and have acted in perfect unison. It is not creditable to either that one took ground which the other overruled."

These be brave words for an organ-grinder to use; but we suppose that even an organ-grinder may be allowed, under strong provocation, and, in a "great emergency," to speak his "real sentiments." The World has ample justification for even a still stronger expression of its "real sentiments." For, did not its Tammany masters, by their rapid change of tunes, utterly ruin the organ for all time, and present its owner to the public gaze with a head-piece like that of the "translated" Bottom? Of this let the following extracts be the proof:

From the World, July 11.	From the World, July 13.
This determination the Superintendent of Police has taken after full consultation, of course, with the City authorities, and under legal advice. He will be sustained in it by all good citizens—of all races, religions, and political opinions.	If we had been among the Mayor's advisers, we should have tried to dissuade him from the line of action which he adopted. We appreciated its boldness and vigor, but we clearly foresaw the storm it would evoke, and would have strenuously advised against it unless he had the most positive assurance that the State Government would stand by him to the end.
That the Police have now done this wise and right thing will earn for them the thanks of all men in the community not bent on riot and disorder.	In our opinion, the other method (HOFFMAN'S) would have been preferable had it been first adopted; and a proclamation two days ago permitting the parade and promising protection to the Orangemen might also have prevented riotous demonstrations.
Men organized on the principles and ruled by the spirit of these lodges have just as much right as and no more right than a band of that Southern Order of the Kuklux, evoked by the Radicals out of their own consciousness, would have to march in procession through the streets of New-York.

A Republic Without Republicans.

M. THIERS takes a singular method of proving his loyalty to the Republic. One after another, the declared Republicans in his Cabinet have been sacrificed to make way for men whose political antecedents identified them either with the Bourbons, the Orleanists, or the First Empire. Whether the resignations of MM. FAVRE and SIMON, announced in today's telegrams, be the result of the pressure of a highly conservative Assembly or proceed from the exercise of the personal choice of M. THIERS, their obvious moral is very much the same. It amounts briefly to this, that in France, a Republic must, of necessity, exist on the suffrance of its enemies. The "country party" seems to have arrived at some rough conclusions pretty nearly as follows: "We have lived to see so many changes of government, that we look upon all with nearly the same amount of distrust. We believe mostly in accomplished facts. Those who choose may rank the Republic as one of these. We prefer to regard M. THIERS and his policy as facts more definite and recognizable. Our constituents have rushed forward with one consent to subscribe to his loan, the army under his control shows no signs of discontent, he is on the best of terms with the Pope, and is, on the whole, as good a bulwark against disorder as we are likely to secure at present. Accordingly, a large proportion of our number will probably agree to sustain President THIERS and this state of things which he calls a Republic. We have no special affection for the name, but so long as it gives us a government strong enough to keep down the 'Reds' we shall let that pass. As a guarantee, however, that there shall be no wholesale importation of new ideas into a system of administration which frequent change of rulers has not materially altered, we shall stipulate that M. THIERS shows no weak leaning to the theoretical democracy of our aggressive Republicans. We think, somehow, that the fine-spun economic theories of M. SIMON point pretty much the same way as the condemned heresies of the Commune. M. THIERS is himself too old to introduce any radical changes into the system that we have, practically, lived under since the Code Napoleon of the great Emperor. We should like to see him associated only with men as old and as prudent as himself, and must request him in looking around for colleagues to state that 'men of eighty are preferred.'"

Whether the rurals in the Assembly have given expression to any such sentiments or not, the recent acts of M. THIERS suggest just such an explanation of their origin. The Republic has, for eighty years, been a name to the French people, and nothing more. Memories of bloodshed, of terror, and of national shame, have been associated with it. It has been cherished as an ideal among its adherents; by the people it has never been experienced as a benignant fact. So little conversant are they in France with what a Republic truly is, that they have no popular definition of its scope, and no handy phrases to signify its purpose. In Paris, even since the Commune, they talk of a Republic which shall be above universal suffrage, that is to say, a Republic in which the minority rules. We of New-York could give them some useful hints as to the construction of such an anomaly: but we should also be obliged to tell them that it was no Republic at all. On the surface, there seems a temporary approach to a political coalition in France. At bottom, the discordant elements are as little capable of union as ever, and parties are so much the more divided from the fact that many are asking for different things under the same name. The single name of THIERS acts as a symbol of union among many jarring factions in France. As the ex-Orleanist, with all his talents, can hardly be said to represent any very definite principle, the old series of feuds, with their inevitable circle of change, seem as yet to be only deferred, not terminated.

Foreign Processions.

The events of the last few days must have convinced all sensible men that it is high time to put a proper restraint on the practice of blocking up our crowded thoroughfares with processions.

There is nothing that some classes of our foreign citizens like better than a procession. Stick a band of music and a few banners before them, fit them out with a pair of white gloves several sizes too large, and a long black coat dragging on the ground, and they will march all over the City, and be as proud of their appearance as a peacock is of his tail. Anything will do as an excuse for a procession. When Pat Mahony dies, there must be a long string of hacks and a few hundred friends and a band of music to follow him to the grave. The Fenians are always pottering about the City in processions, by way of keeping up the enthusiasm of the servant-girls, and getting their weekly subscriptions. On St. Patrick's Day the traffic of the City is suspended for many hours, and, indeed, whenever our Irish friends happen to want the public streets, they are at liberty to take them.

We are always complaining that the City is too small for the indispensable traffic which passes through it. And yet, every now and then, the overcrowded thoroughfares are coolly annexed by our foreign brethren who wish to go through some useless tomfoolery in which no one but themselves takes the slightest interest. If Fenians, or any other class, wish to make Merry-Andrews of themselves, why not go to some sequestered spot—say Coney Island—for the purpose? There they might have a good time, and enjoy, in peace, the ecstasy which a procession seems to be capable of affording them. But this is a place of business, and let us by all means keep our streets free from mummeries which can only make the actors in them very uncomfortable, and provoke the laughter of spectators.

MINOR TOPICS.

The public would like to know what agency, if any, the Board of Police Commissioners had in the promulgation of Superintendent KELSO'S (or Mayor HALL'S) "Order No. 57." Were they consulted relative to it, or were they not? Do the rules of the Board authorize either Mayor HALL or the Superintendent of Police to issue such an order on his own responsibility? These are questions which it concerns the Board of Police Commissioners quite as much as the public to have answered. Mayor HALL, it will be recollected, was first made a member of the Board by the Albany Legislature of last Winter. This was done in direct violation of the pledge given by the Democratic leaders to the Republicans when the new charter was adopted, that the Police Board should be equally divided between Republicans and Democrats. By legislating Mayor HALL into the Board, the political equilibrium was destroyed, and the Police, like all the other branches of the City Government, became a partizan organization. "Order No. 57," it appears, was among the first fruits of this violation of Democratic pledges.

A large number of rioters were discharged from the Justice's Courts yesterday, in default of special charges against them; but they did not get off without a lesson which, it is to be hoped, they will take to heart. That lesson is that their "leaders" are ready to get them into trouble, but slow in trying to get them out. Many of these discharged were fearfully ignorant. They had been led into their lawlessness by men who knew much better than they what they were doing. They were not thieves, and could not pay counsel. They were not political roughs, and could not compel attention. They were simply misguided, hot-headed fellows, who knew just enough to see that an Orangeman was a hereditary foe, but not enough to know that inherited feuds cannot be fought out with impunity in the streets. Ignorant as they were, however, we believe many of them have learned that their miserable "leaders" basely betrayed them, and that is something gained.

Assistant District-Attorney JOHN B. FELLOWS, who, like Mayor HALL, is "always ready to make a speech," and who doubtless expects to succeed our defunct Mayor as the parrot of the "Ring," took it upon himself to harangue the Police after one of their "raids," on the day of the riot. Among other things, he said that "in his opinion the demonstration by the Orangemen today was wholly unwise, and if they had been actuated by a proper spirit they would have refrained from marching with their banners and regalias in a manner which they knew could not but create great excitement." What right had this self-constituted counselor of the public to address such language to the Police while a riot was actually progressing? Did he not know that the Orangemen were virtually invited to turn out by Gov. HOFFMAN'S proclamation, and that they would have been branded as cowards by their enemies if they had not accepted the invitation? We have no doubt that this man FELLOWS thought it "wholly unwise" for Union soldiers to turn out to protect their Government when he was engaged, in the capacity of a rebel Colonel, in trying to destroy it.

An evening paper wants to know if the "display of the right of the sixty-five or ninety Orangemen who turned out July 12, 1871, was worth the lives of the policemen, the soldiers, the women, the child, and the innocent citizens killed and wounded in their behalf?" To this it might be answered, first, that the "lives of the women, the child, and the innocent citizens killed and wounded," were not sacrificed or endangered to maintain any right. They were sacrificed to the motive—probably curiosity—which led them to a spot where everybody knew there was danger, and where common prudence should have kept them from venturing. In the next place, the right maintained at the cost of the lives of the policemen and soldiers was not merely that of the Orangemen to parade as other citizens are allowed to do. It was the right of this community, through its military and Police, to defend such processions as may be formed. It was the defenders of the procession who were attacked, and through them the very principle of law. Precious as are the lives of the dead defenders of the law, the law itself, in this yet free City, is still more so.

Will the members of the "Union League County Council," of the Produce Exchange, and of any other organizations who may have passed resolutions condemnatory of the course of Tammany and Mayor HALL in issuing "General Order No. 57," remember that to get rid of the men who have betrayed and disgraced us, votes are no less necessary than resolutions? It is therefore highly desirable that all such indignant citizens should individually make the further resolve to keep fresh the memory of the crowning shame of July 12, 1871, till New-York is rid of the men who added this to many previous humiliations.

A petition is said to be in course of signature calling for the immediate resignation of Mayor HALL. The Independent citizens of New-York, of both parties, have had enough of his pretentious messages and time-serving policy, and if he can be got rid of in this way, the petition is not likely to want for signatures.

Those zealous Protestants who awaited with open arms the entrance of Father HYACINTHE into the fold of their own church, are doomed to continued disappointment. That excellent man, in a letter in this week's Independent, says that he "must remain constant to the immovable faith of the Catholic Church, and the primitive faith of the Church of Rome." But, he adds, "I refuse my adherence to the pretended dogmas, new and heretical, of the Papal infallibility. I refuse to recognize as really free and legitimate, the pretended Ecumenical Council, in which—I am certain of it—history will see only a strategical ambuscade and a political intrigue." Surely no man can regret that Father HYACINTHE finds it possible to hold to the Catholic faith and to these ideas also. The greater the number who can imitate this example, the better for Catholicism and the world.

WASHINGTON.

The Internal Revenue Bureau and the Treasury Department—District Finances—Extension of the Money-Order System to Great Britain.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, July 13.—Secretary BOUTWELL arrived here to-night at 5 o'clock. It is generally supposed that some new developments in regard to the Revenue Bureau will speedily follow the Secretary's return, but up to this time the condition of the affair, so far as is known, remains precisely as it was at the close of last week. As stated in these dispatches of Saturday evening last, Collector FORD, of New-York, was here today at the special request of Commissioner PLEASONTON, and it is understood on business other than that connected with his district. Its nature, however, is not explained.

DISTRICT FINANCES.

According to documents sent to the District Legislature today, by Controller BAKER, the cash receipts of the Corporation of Washington for the year ending June 30, 1871, were $1,587,270 42. The receipts were $3,553 50 in excess of warrants issued for expenditures.

MRS. WHARTON'S ARREST.

The arrest of Mrs. WHARTON, of Baltimore, on the suspicion of her having caused the death by poison of the late Gen. KETCHUM, has created a great deal of excitement in this city, where the parties were all well known. Mrs. WHARTON has been held in high esteem in the best circles here, and it is not generally believed she can be guilty of the charges against her.

THE SOUTHERN COMMITTEE.

It is stated the Kuklux Committee will certainly adjourn next week.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

ANOTHER KUKLUX THEORY.

The Kuklux Investigating Committee today examined Judge A. R. WRIGHT, of Rome, Ga., ex-member of both United States and Confederate Congresses. He believed in the existence of Kuklux organizations, and said it was originated for police purposes, to repress disturbances likely to grow out of disorderly conduct of the negroes. The latter had behaved much better than was expected, and the Kuklux had sometimes gone beyond the purpose of their organization, which was not political, although being composed exclusively of conservatives, it might occasionally have more effect. He was opposed to secession, and enjoyed the confidence of President LINCOLN after the war; but, although desirous of the acceptance of the situation, he could not feel entirely kindly to the Government while burdened with political disabilities and not allowed to participate in all its advantages.

MONEY ORDERS TO AND FROM ENGLAND.

Articles of a convention for the exchange of postal money orders between the United States and great Britain have been received at the Post Office Department. The convention is duly executed on the part of the United Kingdom, and now awaits execution by the Postmaster-General and the President. The interchange of postal money orders is to begin Oct. 1, and it will require a considerable effort to prepare the blanks and make the necessary preliminary arrangements before that time. The limit of a single money order will be $50, or £10 sterling.

YALE COLLEGE.

The Alumni Meeting—An Important Session—Who was There and What was Done—Reports Read—The Afternoon's Races—Reception at the Art Gallery—Yale Rooms—Class Meetings.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NEW-HAVEN, Wednesday, July 12, 1871.

Today belonged entirely to the Alumni, and was devoted to their meeting and those of the various classes. The attendance at the former, which took place in the morning in Alumni Hall, was the largest held for many years, and the proceedings were, consequently, of more than usual interest. Prof. PORTER, the President elect, was on hand to receive the congratulations of his friends. Among the audience and on the platform I noticed Mr. Bishop, class of 1795, the oldest living graduate of Yale; Senator Buckingham, Judge P. Edwards, Chauncey M. Depew, Hon. Cassius M. Clay, A. H. Husted, Rev. Dr. Atwater of Princeton, Judge Spalding, Class of 1817; Gov. Jewell, Rev. Dr. J. P. Thompson, Rev. Dr. Hutton of New-York, Collector Northrop, the Professors, two Japanese students, Rev. Dr. Budington of Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Leonard Bacon, and others. The meeting was called to order at 10 o'clock by Prof. THACHER, who requested members of the Class of 1821 to take their seats upon the platform, also all graduates before that time. He nominated as Chairman Hon. EDWARDS PIERREPONT. Hon. ALBERT TODD was appointed Secretary. Rev. Dr. ATWATER, of Princeton, opened the meeting with prayer.

Judge PIERREPONT said it had been frequently stated that all Yale needed was rapid progress, and it was proposed to show today that the speaking should make rapid progress, and be at least short and to the point. He thought Yale was making very rapid progress since he was last here. He called for the reading of the names of the dead Alumni.

Prof. GILMAN reported eighty-two deaths during the past year. The oldest was EZEKIEL BACON, of the Class of 1794. Prof. GILMAN also read some notices, and stated that, for obvious reasons, there would be no reception at President WOOLSEY'S, but a reception at the Art Gallery instead. He also stated that Mr. TARBOX would read the poem prepared for the Phi Beta Kappa meeting, in the course of the morning, and that Prof. DWIGHT, of New-York, would be heard at some future Commencement. The following documents were then distributed: Obituary Record, Yale in 1871, a document on the needs of Yale College, prepared by the Faculties, to which I shall refer more at length in another letter. The second document I anticipated in my letter yesterday. An abstract of the obituary record is as follows:

The whole number of deaths reported as occurring during the past year is 82, and the average age of the graduates of the Academical Department is nearly 61 years. Of the deceased from the Academical Department, 19 were clergymen, 24 lawyers, 19 physicians, 10 in business, 6 teachers, and 1 engineer. The deaths are distributed as follows: In Connecticut, 33; New-York, 19; Massachusetts, 7; Ohio, 3; Kentucky, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, 2 each; and the remaining 14 in as many different States. The surviving graduates of the past century are: Class of 1796, TIMOTHY BISHOP, New-Haven, Conn., born Oct. 29, 1777. Class of 1800, Rev. THOMAS WILLIAMS, Providence, R. I., born Nov., 1779.

A hymn prepared for the occasion by Mr. FINCH, of 1849, was then sung to the tune of Lenox, Rev. GEORGE ADAMS, of 1821, leading the music. The Chairman then announced the resignation of President WOOLSEY, and paid a tribute to the efficiency of his administration, and requested Prof THACHER to make some remarks on his event.

Prof. THACHER said he stood alone of those who were in the Faculty when he entered it. Forty years ago he entered as a Freshman when President WOOLSEY began his career as a Professor. He was glad to testify to the merits and of the learning of President WOOLSEY, and to the glory of his career. He presented to the College a picture of the President, with a glowing eulogy. Age had never diminished his efficiency, and even in the last year had he not been an authority for Governments both here and over the water? Had there not been progress for the last forty years? The expenses of the College in 1831, were $20,308, and the income $19,675; the property of the College was $14,063 at that time. The income after an existence of 131 years was a little over $2,000. He would not detail the property of the College today. Progress was seen everywhere. Seven new Professors created by the Corporation today. More Professors created the day President WOOLSEY resigned than the entire College had for 125 years. He alluded to the new and unequaled schools of science, fine arts, philology and a new school of pure mathematics. He claimed that the College grew with but little noise. They had here the reality of a University according to the idea of the learned everywhere. The Professor elaborated the University idea, and thought its complete development was due to President WOOLSEY. It was growth to be proud of, because it destroyed nothing.

Rev. Dr. BACON spoke on the same subject, and said that he was not ashamed of his age and did not care to play the young man. He was the only man alive who participated in the election of President WOOLSEY. He would transmit from the corporation to the Alumni some resolutions entered on their minutes relative to President WOOLSEY'S retirement.

The Chairman then said that the new President would have his say on the following day, after dinner. The Secretary read a resolution passed by the Cleveland Alumni Association June 5, announcing gratification at the advancement of the College, and congratulated President WOOLSEY on his laborious and useful life.

After some other addresses by CASSIUS M. CLAY, Rev. Dr. TARBOX, of Boston, read a poem, the subject of which was the "Changes at Yale." It was cut short in order to meet the occasion.

The Secretary made the following announcements: First, an offer was made of $5,000, if $20,000 more were given in a year, to constitute a Professors' fund. Another gentleman present did the same, and sent his check for $5,000. They both would give $20,000 if $50,000 was raised. Secondly, Hon. O. F. WINCHESTER had purchased an extensive tract of land, the income from which, when sold in small lots, he would devote to the maintenance of an observatory. Mr. WINCHESTER'S gift out of his pocket amounted to $90,000. It was expected the amount would be doubled. The land is at the head of Hillhouse-avenue, and comprises forty acres of land in the best and highest part of the city.

Prof. THATCHER called attention to the means suggested to the Class of 1862 for perfecting a system of class subscriptions. Mr. HINCKS, of 1866, followed the Professor, and announced that he spoke for "young Yale." He thought his constituency were satisfied with the recent changes, and that they felt that money was needed, and as a class they offered $5,000 to the general fund, and advised other classes to do likewise.

Senator BUCKINGHAM being called on, said his presence was due to the interest he felt in Yale. He found her graduates everywhere, and believed that their influence was usually exerted for that which was good and right. In noting the admission of the Alumni to representation of 1872; J. W. Smith, of 1873; and C. Phelps, of the Law School. The race was won by Phelps in 16:45; J. W. Smith second, in 17:05; J. B. Mills third, in 17:17; W. P. Hall fourth, in 17:35; and F. H. Ferry last, in 17:45. It was expected that FERRY would win, but for some unknown reason he did worse than any. The last race was a three-mile shell race between the Sophomores and Scientifics, and was easily won by the latter in 19:50—very poor time.

In the evening the Class of 1868 held their triennial and enjoyed a supper at the New-Haven House. About seventy-five were present, and as they rendered sleep an impossibility for most of the guests in the hotel, it is to be presumed that they had a good time. Several other classes had reunions at the same time. A reception for the graduates and their friends was also held at the Art Gallery, and the Yale Glee Club gave a concert at Music Hall.

YALE ITEMS.

In the Sophomore declamations last night the prizes were taken in the following order: C. P. LATTING, S. P. WILLIAMS and F. B. TARBELL. At the election for President yesterday W. M. EVARTS received one vote.

The following elections to the Faculty were made: Prof. LOUNSBURY to be Professor of English Literature in the Scientific School; HENRY A. REMES, Tutor in English Literature; H. P. WRIGHT, Assistant Professor of Latin; EUGENE RICHARDS, Assistant Professor of Mathematics; THOS. HOOKER and EDWARD HEATON, tutors.

Commencement Day—The Faculty Manifesto—What it Contains—List of the Graduates—The Class of 1871—The Alumni Dinner—Speeches by Prof. Porter and Gov. Jewell—Some Reflections—Honorary Degrees.

From Our Special Correspondent.

NEW-HAVEN, Thursday, July 13, 1871.

Commencement Day opened auspiciously so far as the weather was concerned, but to call it warm but faintly conveys an idea of the heat. However, like a good many other things, it only comes once a year, and so the intolerable heat and many other discomforts of this overcrowded city become perforce tolerable. The Yale Glee Club concert last evening was one of the finest entertainments ever given by students in that line. The singing was excellent, and there was no tedious delays to try the patience of the large audience. It is the best glee club Yale has had for many years.

I alluded, in my last, to a pamphlet circulated among the Alumni at their meeting, prepared by the different Faculties, with reference to a university scheme. As everything connected with Yale College is of public interest at present, I send you a brief abstract of its contents. The pamphlet opens with the following statement:

"The permanent officers in the various departments of Yale College have united in proposing to the corporation that the Professors, with the President, Librarian, Treasurer, and Registrar, be recognized as a University Council, whose duty it shall be to consider unitedly the interests of the University and of its several departments, to communicate their views at their pleasure to the corporation, and annually to lay before that body a full report of the condition of the University in all its parts." A reference to the changes made during President WOOLSEY'S administration follows, and it is then stated that "of the four several 'Faculties,' which co-exist in all the ancient universities of Europe—Theology, Law, Medicine, and Philosophy or the Arts and Sciences—not one can be regarded as completely developed in this country. The institutions which have come into existence under the charter of Yale College. The charter gives to the corporation the powers of a university, and those powers are exercised both by providing [illegible] and by conferring degrees on students after a prescribed examination; but the details herewith submitted will show that a large measure of development would be in every department, before the conception of a true university can be realized."

This is followed by a lengthy exhibit of the condition of each department, with a statement of its wants and necessities, and closes with the original theme and variations on the tune, Yale wants some money. Whether what she has could be better and more judiciously expended is a question which the interested must decide for themselves.

ALUMNI DINNER.

In the afternoon, at 2 o'clock, the Alumni were furnished with a dinner, so-called, at Alumni Hall. So far as anything practically useful to gratify the longings of an empty stomach were concerned the dinner was, and always is, a failure, but the speeches made were interesting and appropriate. The attendance was very large, and to say that they were enthusiastic is only another method of saying that they were Yale men. The ringing cheers with which they saluted President WOOLSEY, and also his successor, proves the love they still feel for everything pertaining to their Alma Mater.

President WOOLSEY, on rising to open the meeting, was greeted with loud and prolonged cheering. He called Prof. DWIGHT to the chair as presiding officer of the occasion, and then proceeded in a humorous strain to make what he called his "dying confession." He alluded to the recent change in the corporation, which was, he said, in accordance with his wishes, although he did not mean to imply any want of confidence in the corporation; but he considered it a step in the right direction. He added that, since the graduates now had representation, they wanted also some capital in the concern. He would say that, for his part, he had as much confidence in the young men as in the old. He did not want to see any institution composed solely either of young or of old men, but they should both work together. Whatever our ideas with regard to Yale College might be, he took it for granted that the graduates had settled on two things, to have a perfect life and to regard culture and discipline as the main things in education rather than mere knowledge. He would rather see the brick walls disappear, than to have these things forgotten. In conclusion, he asked of the young men, would they support their Alma Mater as an institution for culture and discipline? [Loud cheering.] If they would, the College would be blessed, and may God bless her.

Prof. DWIGHT, in taking the chair, said that it was with reluctance that he ventured to preside, but he had to do it. He proceeded to relate a little story of his own experience to show how he had been mistaken for President WOOLSEY the night before, and used it as an illustration of how a shadow might be taken for the substance. The Professor's remarks were exceedingly humorous and well received. Evidently he had been often mistaken for President WOOLSEY, and some of the complications ensuing were exceedingly funny and enjoyed by all present. He claimed, therefore, to be the shadow of President WOOLSEY. Permission to smoke was then given, after which "Gandeamus" was sung by the entire body, with good effect. The first toast was: "The State of Connecticut, always friendly to Yale," responded to by Gov. JEWELL as follows:

Permit me to thank you, Mr. President, not only for the honorable mention of the Chief Magistrate of our State, but for the courteous manner in which you have been pleased to speak of myself; and you, gentlemen of the Alumni, for this most cordial reception. I have had the fortune or perhaps the misfortune of being a sort of intermittent Governor of this Commonwealth. It has attacked me like the fever and ague. Sometimes I am very cold, in fact frozen up and laid out stark and stiff, and sometimes I am prodigiously hot. I am glad this is a hot year, am rejoiced to be present here today for several reasons. In the first place, this is the year of new departures for Yale College, and I believe in new departures, whether for a State, a political party or a college. I particularly believe in them when it is to leave a wrong system or set of principles and take a right one. My short experience, when officially connected with the College, convinced me that it would be very advantageous to it could the graduates have a direct voice in its control. I have done what I could to bring it about. It is now a fact accomplished, and a generous one I think it is, too, on the part of the legislative branch of the State Government. They have given to you, gentlemen of the Alumni, their entire representation in the Board of Corporation generously, freely, believing it would advance the interests of both the State and the College. They have asked for no pledges, have made no requirements; they have walked out of the management entirely that you may walk in. They believe that members of the Board of Control elected from the graduates, scattered as they are in all parts of our country, embracing as they do all sorts of professions and occupations, varying in thought and talent, disposition and opportunity, must give an impetus to the College greater than ever before. They believe that should you select some of these new members from the rest, which you doubtless will do, it would perhaps strengthen the tie that binds us together, cement more closely the friendship that now exists between the older portions of our country and the new and growing sections which already so largely outnumber us. Now, gentlemen, it is in your hands. Our duty is done, yours begins. There are graduates enough from this College, if they would but use their influence actively, to increase its numbers to double in five years; and this is what the State expects of you. Shall we be disappointed? I hope not. We expect you to found a great university here at no distant day, composed of a number of colleges, each one of which shall be as large as the Yale College of today. If you cannot or will not do this, just say so, and, though I do not like to do it, yet I must for once allow my desire for telling the whole truth get the better of my modesty; if you do not propose to take this matter in hand vigorously, why, we outsiders will. We will change the law, and go into the Board ourselves, and take a building or two and go to manufacturing brass, cotton or leather, go to make money and endow it, and let the clergymen run it, for they have found that they could do it, and will too. When that time comes we shall eat these dinners ourselves, and exclude you as carefully as you now do us, unless one of you happen to be Governor, of which there is but little chance; for if you cannot take care of the College, I don't believe you will be smart enough to get elected Governor of this State. I have concluded that it is less work to run Yale College than to be elected Governor, particularly when one has so able a man and not a graduate to contend with. It is with pleasure also that I have been permitted to take a part in the election of the new President of this College, an honored son of our State, who is by his learning so well fitted to fill the place of the great and good men who have gone before. The State and community have every reason to expect that the College will, under him, continue to pursue her onward and upward course. We welcome him in the name of the State to his new position. I am glad also to be officially connected with the College, and to be present on this occasion to bear my testimony to the zeal, fidelity and ability with which our honored and patriotic President has presided over this institution for a quarter of a century. Having brought to the work rare qualifications of both mind and heart, he has raised still higher a position made very honorable by his illustrious predecessor. By his uniform urbanity of manner, he has gained the affection and esteem of all, both in and out of the College. By his firmness of and devotion to principle he has raised the standard of morals and religion in the community in which you have lived. By the thorough training of the large number of young men which have come under his instruction he has conferred a signal service upon the State and nation. By his classical scholarship and exposition of international law, he has contributed largely toward the moulding of the opinion and action of the Republic in the right direction. From the high position I now hold, made still more honorable by the influence of his life and acts, I wish to thank him in the name of the State of Connecticut for what he has been, for what he has done, for what he is.

The next sentiment was "President WOOLSEY, his pupils offered him their tribute of love."

President WHITE, of Cornell, responded to this toast. He said that he felt and knew that President WOOLSEY had the love and gratitude of all the sons of Yale. In eloquent language Mr. WHITE paid a tribute to the worth of the retiring President.

Several other speakers responded to different toasts before the meeting adjourned.

SOME REFLECTIONS.

Now that Commencement week is over I have a few general remarks to make, and in the first place I wish to tender my thanks to the gentlemen of the New-Haven House for courtesies extended. At a time calculated to try men's patience and every other virtue to the utmost, I have found them ready to oblige and genial and pleasant to all. Not only is the hotel first-class in every respect, but it has gentlemen for clerks, which is an exception to any hotel rule I have yet discovered. With regard to Yale, its prospects are bright and its one hundred and seventy-first Commencement has been brilliant and successful. That it has made the wisest choice in its election of a new President I do not venture to say, but fettered as it is by rules, laws and regulations of a century ago, it has perhaps made the best choice possible.

Commencement of Burlington College, New-Jersey.

This institution closed its twenty-fourth year on Tuesday last. At 8 A. M., on that day, after the customary service in the new chapel, which has lately been opened and fitted up, the various forms were successively called into the largest class-room and examined by the rector and Professors, in the presence of Right Rev. Dr. ODENHEIMER, the President, a large number of the reverend clergy and others, patrons and friends of the institution, including quite an array of ladies. Great thoroughness in discipline, drill and study was evinced in these several examinations.

At 2½ P. M., all repaired the chapel, when prizes were awarded to the first and second students in general average throughout the scholastic year. The successful boys were JOHN DOWS HILLS and EUGENE JEFFRY BABCOCK. Following this, the several forms were called forward and promoted, in a few appropriate words by the Right Reverend President. At the dinner Bishop ODENHEIMER presided, and, at its close called upon Rev. JAMES W. BRADIN and Rev. HOBART CHETWOOD, former rectors of the College, and Rev. GEORGE MORGAN HILLS, of St. Mary's Parish, Burlington, who made stirring speeches.

In the evening, the chapel was again filled, to listen to an oration from an old graduate, C. WILLING LITTELL, Esq., of Philadelphia, who, in an uncommonly finished production, held the attention of all for nearly an hour.

Burlington College enjoys an ample domain and excellent buildings on the Delaware River, a spot not only accessible, but healthful and most attractive. Its proximity to St. Mary's Hall enables parents who have both sons and daughters to place their children near each other. Under the efficient management of its present rector, Rev. CHARLES T. KELLOGG, it has rapidly increased in numbers and interest during the past year, and promises more for the future.

Amusements—The Thompson Troupe.

Mr. SAMUEL COLVILLE has been advised of the almost complete formation of Miss LYDIA THOMPSON'S troupe, to appear at Wallack's on or about Aug. 7 next. The artists engaged are Miss Hetty Tracey, soubrette; Miss Zullini, contralto vocalist; Miss Camille Dubois, prima donna; Miss Bellew, Miss Egerton, Miss Lotta Mira, burlesque performers, from the London Theatres; Messrs. Harry Beckett, Willie Edouin, and W. H. Montgomery, comedians, and Mr. Michael Connolly, musical director.

The Masses at Jefferson Market.

Jefferson Market Police Court was filled yesterday by a large crowd of persons in expectation of the examination of the rioters arrested the previous day. Judge SHANDLEY, the presiding justice, manifested a decided disposition to treat the offenders with sharp justice, and promptly committed them for trial at the Court of General Sessions. PATRICK HOGAN, a laborer, residing at One Hundred and Twenty-third-street, was charged by Capt. HEDDEN, of the Fifteenth Precinct, with addressing an excited crowd from the steps of the Station-house, and calling upon them to rescue their comrades who had been arrested. Capt. HEDDEN promptly secured and put him into the cell. Justice SHANDLEY committed him for trial to the Court of General Sessions.

Quire, residence not stated.

The Recorder's Opinion of the Rioters.

Last evening a TIMES reporter was commissioned to interview Judge GARVIN with regard to the action to be taken for the punishment of the rioters arrested in connection with the Orange-Papist riot and the measures to be adopted for the repression of similar disturbances in the future. On making inquiry at his residence he ascertained that the Judge had gone off to Niagara Falls with his family, and our reporter extending his labor repaired to the dwelling of Recorder HACKETT, in Park-avenue, to obtain his views on the subject. The Recorder treated him courteously, and on the purpose of the visit being made known, entered immediately into an expression of his opinion concerning the affray on the 12th. He stated that in respect of the riot itself it was unnecessary to express an opinion, as there was hardly a dissenting voice with regard to it. He had no intimation whatever from the prosecuting officers as to the action they proposed to take for the punishment of the rioters, and in criminal prosecutions generally, he said, he was not acquainted with the nature of the calendar until the day when it was presented for trial. On the contrary, to avoid prejudice to the injury of the prisoner, he studiously refrained from obtaining any information in regard to a case until it was formally developed by the evidence. It was only in great cases, like the McFarland trial, that he consulted with the District-Attorney, and invariably formed a judgment exclusively on the evidence adduced on the trial. What the policy of the Government would be he did not profess to know, but asserted that the people might confidently repose in its determination to have even-handed justice distributed to all. He presumed that the rioters would be taken before the committing Magistrate, and if the testimony justified such a course, they would be returned for trial to the Court of General Sessions. In that event, if he presided in Court, he would deal out impartial justice and punish criminals according to the gravity of the offense. On this subject he desired to say nothing further, observing that he had no official communication on its regard. On his attention being called to the conduct of the Hibernians prior to the riot, in advertising drill-meetings and making preparations for an armed disturbance of the peace, he professed to have no cognizance of it, and did not know what would be done in relation to it. In his opinion a preconcerted design to engage in a riot was a very grave crime, and if proven it would be the bounden duty of the authorities to hunt up the offenders and bring them to justice. For his part he deemed their offense more culpable than that of those who actually participated in the riot, and would deal with them accordingly. Not thinking it necessary to pursue the conversation much further, our reporter left and called at the residence of Mr. ALGERNON SULLIVAN, the Assistant District-Attorney, in Eleventh-street, with the view of ascertaining something definite in the matter. Mr. SULLIVAN was not at home, and it was stated that he would in all likelihood be found either at the Manhattan Club or Delmonico's. Our reporter called at each of these places, but with the same result, and after a considerable hunt was compelled to return. A similar result attended the effort to "interview" Col. FELLOWS, his associate.

The Union League County Council on the Tammany Riot.

A regular meeting of the County Council of the Union League of America was held at their head-quarters, corner of Bleecker-street and Bowery, last evening, Mr. N. APPLETON in the chair. The following resolutions were offered by Mr. DAVID B. MELLISH:

Resolved, That in the late surrender by the Tammany Party and Mayor HALL, through Order No. 57, of the lives and property of the law-abiding citizens of this Metropolis, to a drunken, bigoted and lawless mob, we recognise the same principles and spirit that in '61, under HORATIO SEYMOUR, surrendered the lives and property of the City to the rioters and orphan asylum burners of July 13 of that year, and the same spirit of executive imbecility and criminality that caused BUCHANAN to turn the nation over without striking a blow to the rebels of '61.

Resolved, That the Tammany Ring, by allowing their employes on July 12 of last year to leave their work in the middle of the afternoon and break into a private park and murder innocent men, women and children there enjoying harmless amusement, and then, after the murders were committed, neither arresting or trying or convicting or punishing the murderers, or even discharging them from public employment, are morally responsible for the disorders and loss of life of the 12th inst., and should be held up to the just indignation and opprobrium of the whole public.

Resolved, That such a gang of aiders, abettors and supporters of inhumanism and disorder as this Tammany Ring have for years shown themselves to be, are utterly unworthy the confidence or support of either the City, the State, or nation.

Resolved, That all good citizens, irrespective of party, should unite to denounce and hurl from power, at the earliest moment, this infamous clique.

It was urged by some of the speakers that it was but kicking a dead carcass to denounce OAKEY HALL, and Mr. MARKS was earnest in the opinion that Gov. HOFFMAN'S name should be included as responsible. Mr. LUCAS thought there could be no question that Gov. HOFFMAN was aware of the impending difficulties, and that his tardy action was the result of the aroused indignation of the community.

Mr. MELLISH said he regarded KELSO as a man of wax, acting under the direction of HALL. Mr. MCWATTERS thought HALL simply a Joseph Surface, and as much a man of wax as KELSO. It could not be doubted that HOFFMAN knew what was going on.

Mr. CAMPBELL moved to amend in the first resolution, after the words "Order No. 57," by inserting "issued by Superintendent KELSO, prompted by his masters, HALL, HOFFMAN & Co." The resolutions, as thus amended, were adopted. Several members were initiated, and the Council adjourned.

The Park Commissioners and the Rioters.

At the meeting of the Department of Parks yesterday, Commissioner WOOD proposed the following resolution, which was unanimously passed, the Chairman stating that orders had been issued from the Department to keep all the men at work on the 12th.

Resolved, That Superintendent WESTERVELT be requested to furnish to the Board the names of the workmen who may have, contrary to orders issued by this Department, absented themselves from work on Wednesday, July 12, 1871.

All Quiet in Jersey City.

Jersey City wore its usual aspect of peace and industry yesterday, after the excitement of the previous day. On the whole, the deportment of the people was highly commendable, and the militiamen's task a very light one, except that they lost some sleep. The Fourth Regiment remained quartered in the City Armory all night, and were dismissed yesterday morning at 6 o'clock.

The parties arrested in Jersey City on Wednesday for carrying concealed weapons were each fined $20 yesterday. Those arrested for inciting to riot and carrying concealed deadly weapons are held for further examination.

Major-Gen. RUNYON has issued the subjoined order with reference to the New-Jersey State militia and the part they took in Jersey City:

HEAD-QUARTERS NATIONAL GUARD S. N. J., NEWARK, July 13, 1871.

GENERAL ORDER NO. 9.—The Major-General Commanding takes occasion to express his gratification at the promptness with which his order of the 11th inst., for the service of yesterday, was responded to. The citizen-soldier can discharge no more important duty, render no higher service, than to assist in maintaining the good order of society, securing obedience to law, and protecting the rights of the people. The effective condition of the troops (the First Brigade) ordered out for active duty, and the readiness exhibited by the Second Brigade in their tender of service, are worthy of special recognition. By command of Major-Gen. RUNYON.

NOTES FROM THE PEOPLE.

A Defense of Grand Sire Stuart.

I observe under the head of "Secret Societies," in your last Sunday's paper, a letter presumptuously addressed to the head of the Navy Department by a person in Brattleboro, Vt., pretentiously signing himself "J. W. PHELPS, President of the Windham County Anti-Masonic Society," in which he, with rare pusillanimity, attempts to cast a slur upon, and to otherwise bring into contempt our estimable townsman FREDERICK D. STUART, Esq. Mr. STUART, through solid worth, and many good deeds, has gradually risen to the prominent and distinguished position of Grand Sire of the Order of Odd-fellows in the United States, and is continually in receipt of honors and well merited attention from the great and good of the order from all foreign lands where the order flourishes. He was connected as one of the Executive officers under Commodore PERRY, with the celebrated Japan Expedition—has frequently been honored with other prominent positions in the service of his country—and during the war of the rebellion was a most efficient volunteer officer in the naval service. He is a man of highest integrity—free from all "vain-glory and hypocrisy"—a person entirely above fear and without reproach, whatever the anti-masonic PHELPS may say to the contrary. I am not an Odd-fellow, and am not very likely to become one, but if there is any inducement more than another which would incline me that way it would be the bright example of Grand Sire STUART, whose whole life, private and public, has been a career of unselfish, generous devotion to the cause of humanity; and there is not a single person at home, or abroad in the many lands where he is known, with whom he has come into familiar contact, who would not peruse, with feelings of deepest resentment, the puerile attempt of Mr. anti-Masonic PHELPS to put a single reproach upon him; and the malignity of that letter, so far-fetched, so causeless, and so unmerited, justifies me in the belief that its writer has sought to gratify his disappointment at some slight put upon him by a Masonic or Odd-fellow association, and by no means in vindication of any old dead-letter law of the Green Mountain State against secret societies.

Very respectfully yours, GOOD-WILL.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, July 11, 1871.

Hall's Treachery.

What about the coward, who, as Chief Magistrate of the principal City of the United States, surrendered to a mob before a blow had been struck? Will the Chamber of Commerce, the Merchants' and other Exchanges, the Union League and other clubs, unite to strip off whatever insignia of office he may have, and to publicly proclaim of him what they would of an American General who had surrendered his army the day before the battle, or of an American Commander who had given up his ship the day before the fight. I am a poor native of this State, whose fathers came here before the Revolution, and fought for this Republic in every war in which it has been engaged. I know I have no right to make such inquiries, but I have read of another kind of Mayor in a certain history of The Rise of the Dutch Republic. My head is full of the conduct of men in the good old times, and this must be my apology if I have said anything to offend those who would be our masters.

Yours, &c., B. H.

A Word to the Roman Catholic Clergy.

Why is it that the Roman Catholic clergy, who are so hostile to Masonry and all secret institutions, connive at the existence of Fenianism and Hibernianism, very many of whose members are in open communion with that Church? They are both secret and notoriously dangerous organizations, and were the clergy sincere in their professions they would not only condemn, but endeavor to suppress them by expelling all members of the church connected with them. It is time they took a new departure and acted more consistently with their pretensions.

CONSISTENCY.

HOBOKEN, Thursday, July 13, 1871.

The Two Proclamations.

General Order No. 57 of the Superintendent of Police was a unique production, well calculated to eliminate from the public mind the last semblance of respect for our City rulers. It was the act of a moral coward, whose self-interest, and not a conscientious sense of duty, had prompted to sign and issue such an infamous document. And KELSO, the protector of our lives and property, our shield and hope in time of riot and bloodshed, did this disgraceful thing! Better, like CRANMER, to consume the offending hand in the flame, than to have insulted American civilization and society as he has! I hold, Sir, that he should have been manly enough to resign his post rather than subject New-York to such shameful disgrace, in bowing the knee to a threatening Papist rabble. I doubt not that "St. Patrick's Day," 17th March next, will see our toadying Mayor HALL brushing up his Emerald green, and thus arrayed, bowing and scraping before the delighted "bog-trotters," and "shillalah"-drivers from the balustrade of the City Hall, so that they may continue him in office to degrade the American and Protestant community. And we must suffer such shame, the authority of such an ignoble Chief Magistrate.

But here intervenes Gov. HOFFMAN, and revokes, today, the above KELSO order, and tardily permits the Protestants and Orangemen Associations to celebrate their festival. How oily and persuasive the opening of his proclamation, but, being well analyzed, how deceptive and "baseless as the fabric of a vision!" His Excellency is too late in the matter. That sunset preamble: "Having been only this day apprised of the actual condition of things, with reference to the proposed procession to-morrow," &c. He is too late, when we remember that for ten days past the Romanists have openly avowed their intent to shed Protestant blood, and enact their worst deeds of violence if the Orangemen should presume to march through our streets in peaceful procession.

That order of revocation will not stay the feverish pulse of the insulted but enlightened public. It will not repair, it will rather render more evanescent the blighted and decaying fortunes of the priest-ridden Democratic Party. It is the merest gauze, and will not hide the sins of the Irish Tammany Ring. It will only consign its author to the same measure of contempt which an intelligent people already have for their unscrupulous rulers. It is too late, Gov. HOFFMAN! The die is cast. The KELSO order and your own revoking manifesto have only fastened a heavier mill-stone of political disappointment about your neck. The Papist Tammanyites are sinking. Presidential aspirations in a bottomless abyss of sorrow. Turn, then, while there is time, from your evil associates, and exemplify in practice the purer doctrines cherished in your earlier days, and we shall gladly hail with joy your "new departure," while now, in the dim light of this laggard proclamation, we only condemn. And let "grape and canister" be the persuasives when mobs dictate to the rulers of a great AMERICAN METROPOLIS.

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, July 12, 1871.

A Neglected Skulker.

Among the honorable gentlemen who are supposed to have the management of the affairs of our City Government, and who, on the day of trial, slunk away from sight and were oblivious to the call of duty, thus proving themselves to be on the side of the mob, why are you so cruel and unjust as to omit the name of the orator par excellence of St. Tammany—the chivalrous, the poetic, the honorable RICHARD O'GORMAN? By so doing you have placed him in an extremely unpleasant position before his friends—the rioters. How are they to know that he has done their will, or indeed that he has not done his utmost to "squelch" them? The record of HALL, CONNOLLY and BRENNAN is eminently first-class, and they will be forever recognized as friends; but by your injustice in omitting O'GORMAN'S name, our elegant Corporation Counsel has the onus of proving that he did his share for their cause by exerting his influence against them. As he is on the "make," and no doubt thinks there is "nothing worth having nowadays but office," (under Tammany,) we have no fear but that he will make his record with his mob friends as good as HALL'S. It is unnecessary to say that the intelligent, law-respecting people of this City are aware that RICHARD O'GORMAN, who pretended to have so much influence with his countrymen, has not attempted to exercise it upon them during the past few days.

A FORMER TAMMANYITE.

NEW-YORK, Thursday, July 13, 1871.

A Double Check for the Mayor.

This chief of the infamous Ring of New-York has now been compelled by an outraged people to surrender twice lately, to public opinion, in his attempt to crush liberty, as in the case of the Orange procession, and in his late published recommendation to the Police to violate the laws of the State made for the protection of dumb animals. The firm, temperate and logical reply of HENRY BERGH to the unprecedented order of this Chief Magistrate of a great City, counseling resistance to the laws, notwithstanding his oath to enforce them, is a good pendant to the proclamation of Gov. HOFFMAN. Mr. BERGH disregarded his insolent and uninlawful proclamation; and now the Governor of the State revokes his Roman Catholic, demagogical, vote-seeking order to suppress the rights of Protestant citizens. Is it possible that this superficial, ungrammatical Ringmaster lacks brains to see what every one else beholds, namely, that a black cloud is forming over his head and those of his satellites, which will crush him and them to atoms?

H.

Another Disgusted Democrat.

Shall the Americans of New-York City see themselves dictated to in all civic matters by an ignorant, fanatic mob of our Irish population? Shame! shame! Let every true American assert his birthright and wrest the power from the hot-headed, blood-thirsty rabble that sustain such inefaceable disgraces as TWEED, HALL & CO. in office. Well may the deepest feelings of all native-born Americans be stirred when such outrageous scenes as occurred today in our midst are at any time liable to dishonor us again. Hoping that you will publish this in your fearless journal, as coming from one who has always professed to be a Democrat, but who will hereafter vote the Republican City ticket until the Democratic Party is cleared of this scum.

AMERICAN.

WEDNESDAY, July 12.

The Slaughtered Militiamen.

Ought not the members of the Ninth Regiment who fell so gloriously yesterday in defense of the rights of all of us, have a public funeral, the day to be observed as a Municipal holiday, at least?

CIVIL AND RELIGIOUS LIBERTY.

The Cincinnati Rabbinical Conference and the Protestants.

You would oblige me by publishing in your valuable paper the annexed explanatory statement, as a provisional reply to the protest against the Cincinnati Rabbinical Conference, issued by a member of Rabbisan Cantors:

Explanatory Statement.

If the circulated accusation of Atheism had been brought forward only against my person, I would never have vouchsafed the accusers any reply; but my utterances at the Cincinnati Conference were misrepresented, and used by antagonists for the purpose of blackening in the eyes of the world and discrediting the said assembly, of which I am a member. I owe, therefore, to the honor of this assembly to state openly herewith, that to whatever extent my utterance in question may have been misunderstood by some, it was never my intention, through the same, to deny the existence and individuality of God.

REV. DR. J. MAYER.

CLEVELAND, Sunday, July 9, 1871.

Stabbing Affray at Hoboken.

A difficulty occurred at Hoboken last evening between two lads, during which one of them was fatally wounded. Neither of the two young men was more than nineteen years old. These embryo rioters were named TIMOTHY COLLINS and SMITH REUBEN. They were standing alone at Grand and First streets, and were heard using high words, though the difficulty was not sufficient to attract attention until REUBEN cried out "I'm killed," and fell to the sidewalk. COLLINS immediately fled, and as REUBEN was insensible, the immediate cause of the trouble is not known. The body was taken into a drug-store at First and Willow streets, where a physician was called. The wound was an inch or more wide, of considerable depth, and the knife had completely severed the cartilaginous portion of the lower rib. The wound is on the left side, immediately under the heart, and, as there was no external bleeding, the doctor stated that he would probably not live. He was taken to St. Mary's Hospital, and on the way had a number of rapidly-following convulsions. COLLINS had not been arrested at a late hour.

THE WEATHER.

PERSONAL, POLITICAL, AND GENERAL.

One county in Iowa reports three men made insane by the excessive use of tobacco.

One of the prizes at the Junior exhibition at Bowdoin College was awarded to HAROLD WILDER, of Brooklyn.

Only one Democratic paper in Georgia, it is asserted, endorses the new departure, and that one is of very recent projection.

There is to be a meeting of the entire State Central Committee of the Conservative Party of Virginia in Richmond, on Wednesday, July 20.

They tell of a man who was so anxious to get away from Chicago that he walked all the way to Detroit.

Chicago brags of a German who has drank, at a single saloon, in the last four weeks, 1,130 glasses of lager-beer.

A young man in Illinois, while turning his partner at a ball on the Fourth, dislocated his shoulder.

Waterbury, Conn., is to have a new Democratic paper. Its American is good enough to satisfy reasonable men of either party.

An eastern express transported a day or two ago as freight from Maine to Massachusetts a Frenchman who cannot speak English.

Senator CARPENTER is to deliver the annual address at the Southern Wisconsin Agricultural Fair in September.

The Louisville Courier-Journal reminds the Democratic organs that the Democratic Party has at this time very pressing need of converts.

A Chicago "personal" is to the effect that a young lady was seen on State-street a night or two ago, attired in a white dress, blue sack, yellow hat, pink gloves and green bows.

It is reported that seventeen horses belonging to a street-car company in New-Haven have been attacked with the disease prevalent in this City.

A blind ox, recently sold in Minnesota, broke from the inclosure of its purchaser, swam a river and walked twenty miles to its old home, guided by "instinct."

A Hartford man who made a little lunch on raw oysters, at twenty-five cents a dozen, paid the bill when his appetite was satisfied. It amounted to $5 50.

The Boston Traveller, regarding Gen. BUTLER as too useful in Congress to be spared, comes out in favor of Dr. GEO. B. LORING for Governor of Massachusetts.

Some of Gen. HANCOCK'S friends, it is said, met in Washington recently, and subscribed $1,000 each, to aid his election to the Presidency, intending to raise the sum of $100,000, if need be.

The publication of the Selma (Ala.) Press, a weekly Republican paper, has been suspended. Its subscription list has been transferred to the Mobile Republican.

The Administrator of Finance in New-Orleans says that the city is amply able to meet the interest on her bonds, and that on the 1st of July there was on deposit at the Fiscal Agency the sum of $564,063 50 for that purpose.

Capt. J. HAMPDEN CHAMBERLAYNE and R. P. BARHAM, two Lynchburg editors, had a personal encounter on Saturday, growing out of some newspaper quarrel, but by-standers interfered and no blood was shed on that occasion.

The Albany Morning Express, thinking New-York should have the Vice-Presidency at the next term, presents the names of GEORGE W. CURTIS and President WHITE, of Cornell University.

A law passed at the recent session of the Pennsylvania Legislature provides that clergymen and Justices of the Peace shall not be liable to penalty when they ignorantly marry persons under lawful age.

The will of the late ALBERT SCHUMACHER, of Baltimore, gives $10,000 to the German Society of that city, $10,000 to the German Lutheran Church there, and $5,000 to the Seeforth at Bremen. His estate is valued at about $750,000.

The necessity that the Governor of Connecticut should have a law officer, appointed by himself, to whom he could apply for advice in the transaction of the legal business of the State, is urged by the Hartford Courant.

An Oregon paper protests that in speaking of the cantata of "Esther," it really didn't mean to say HAMAN was a bold, excellent man; it wrote him down only a bold, exultant man, and it apologizes to HAMAN, his heirs and assigns, for the sad misprint.

Two brothers met in Grand Rapids, Mich., on the 4th, after a separation of sixteen years, having seen each other but once in that time. One served during the rebellion in the Southern Army, the other in the Northern, and the latter was taken prisoner by his brother's command.

The Connecticut House has appropriated $2,500 for the expenses of a Commission, to consist of Govs. JEWELL and ENGLISH, and Mayor BRANDEGEE, of New-London, to visit Washington next Winter in aid of a navy-yard at New-London.

In his speech at Frankfort, Ky., Hon. G. W. CRADDOCK unequivocally said that so far as Kentucky is concerned the great body of the Democracy is opposed to the new departure, and that the discussion of the subject there will do much harm.

Sergt. DEMOREST was shot dead while sitting at a table in his quarters at Fort Niagara on the 8th inst. It is thought that the assassin was a soldier named WILLIAMS, who was in an adjoining room, and that he attempted to shoot himself afterward and failed.

A very modest Kentucky woman writes to the Louisville Courier-Journal that she thinks the ladies in New-York City are the homeliest she has ever seen, and that she also thinks she can now understand why it is that Kentucky ladies are so much admired by New-Yorkers.

Judge HARDING, of Scranton, Penn., has, by injunctions on complaint of Inspector WILLIAMS, restrained the working of four different collieries, on account of the non-conformity of the operators with the provisions of the Mine Ventilation law.

Troy has received an order for sixteen slabs of bell-metal, to weigh 100 pounds each, from some monks who have built a church on one of the peaks of the Andes. They have constructed a furnace, and intend to cast a bell from the metal after the slabs have been taken up the mountain on the backs of mules.

At the suggestion of the Grand Jury Judge ORR has initiated proceedings against THOMAS M. WILLIAMSON, a County School Commissioner in South Carolina, who is accused of being habitually so intoxicated that he is disqualified from properly performing the duties of his office.

Gen. HARLAN is making an energetic and effective canvass in Kentucky, and the Louisville Commercial cheeringly says that if the Republicans throughout the State will work with the energy and zeal displayed by him and his colleagues on the State ticket, they will achieve a brilliant victory, or accomplish such a result as will amount to a victory.

The Petersburg (Va.) Index accuses Gen. O. O. HOWARD of being merely a man of peace, of contracts and of speeches. If one were to credit the Southern Democratic Press of 1871 he could scarcely help believing that in the war of the rebellion the Southern armies were defeated and overpowered by a set of the most arrant cowards that ever ran away from a foe.

The regular express peach-trains from Delaware have commenced to run. On Monday the regular trains carried twenty car-loads of fruit—an unprecedentedly large shipment so early in the season. The fruit is not yet really first-class, but the yield promises to be so immense that the growers are anxious to get all they can to market as soon as possible.

An Iowa Democrat, one of the old sort, is out in a letter denouncing "the pusillanimous departure of the shoddy Democracy of Iowa into the Republican camp," and recommending that a convention of the steadfast political followers of THOMAS JEFFERSON be held at Des Moines, on the 15th of August, for nominations and campaign purposes.

According to the call for the Republican State Convention in Wisconsin, the Milwaukee Republican says: "We want a good ticket, composed of suitable and capable men—a short, honest, Radical Republican platform that shall fairly set forth our principles without any blinking, and that sustain the Administration of Gen. GRANT, and then on to victory."

They are having a funny contest in Peoria, Ill. A young man recently smoked a cigar to within about an inch of the tip without the ashes falling off. A rival smoked another half an inch shorter than his, and triumphantly labeled the ashes. And now all the young smokers in Peoria are trying to smoke a cigar shorter than any one else without breaking the ashes.

Nashua, N. H., furnishes a ghost story. A staid citizen reports that for three years he has been grievously tormented at times by a strange noise that sounds like chopping wood, continuing for an hour at a time. At other times there is a noise as of moving chairs and tables in the kitchen, and even the sound of men's voices in earnest conversation in the cellar is heard. Again, on the roof there seems to be a clatter of hoofs, followed by the noise of pick and shovel in active use. His entire family, he says, have heard these strange manifestations, and no one has yet been able to explain the mystery.

One of the oddest questions ever submitted to lawyers is now puzzling those of Hartford, Conn. It seems that a man who recently died there left a widow, childless, but expecting shortly to become a mother. By his will he provided that if the expected child should prove to be a boy, two-thirds of the property should go to him, and one-third to the widowed mother. If, however, the child proved to be a girl, only one-third of the estate was to go to her, and two-thirds to the mother. The result, of course, was awaited with an interest even greater than that usually bestowed upon such events. The result is—the widow has become the mother of twins—a boy and girl.

J. PROCTOR KNOTT has been making, in Kentucky, what the Democratic papers of the State call "a brilliant speech, which comprised a withering arraignment of the new departure and afforded some strong meat for his weak-kneed brethren." He said that the new departure is a species of party strategy entirely too deep for his conception, unless it is for the purpose of constructing a platform upon which some favorite candidate for the Presidency may stand with safety and comfort to himself, or unless it be as an old farmer said the other day, when he asked his opinion of the "new departure," that some impatient Democrats seeing the Radical Party going to destruction on "a down grade with the breaks off," have determined to beat them by jumping on to the "cow-catcher."

The trial of ALFRED ZIEGENMEYER, for the murder of WILLIAM GUMBLETON in Chicago, in January last, was begun in the Criminal Court of that city on the 9th inst. Contrary to expectation, a jury was obtained on that day. STANTON BLAKE, of the firm of BLAKE BROTHERS & Co., of this City, and two brothers of the murdered man were present in the Court-room, as were the detectives, DIXON and ELLIS, who have worked the case from the beginning, and brought the accused back from Germany. The brothers, one of whom has come from Ireland, examined the body, which was exhumed on the day previous, for the purpose of identifying it if possible, but it was so much decomposed that they could not recognize the features. The height and outline of the body, and the fact that two teeth were missing, led them to the belief that it was the body of their brother. The Manufacturers' National Bank of Chicago has commenced suit in the Circuit Court against ZIEGENMEYER to recover an indebtedness of $7,981 50, procured of the institution by the use of the forged name of GUMBLETON upon a check drawn by BLAKE BROTHERS & Co. upon the Fourth National Bank of New-York City.

The Louisville Commercial complains earnestly of the outrages committed by a band of lawless men in Estill County, Kentucky. These outrages, it says, have continued for several months. Even a helpless woman was horribly whipped because of her refusal to promise that she would cease telling what she thought of such midnight marauders. The Trustee of Berea College was whipped for consulting with the blacks in Fitchburg, and several others for less offenses. Three men were murdered at the May election, in the Miller's Creek Precinct, and a mob of sixty men lately attempted the murder, at night, of a negro family in Fitchburg. Various threats have been made against the blacks in general at the Red River Iron-works, and against the skilled miners employed there, who have mainly come from other States. Individuals and whole families have been notified to leave at the peril of their lives, and mining operations in Estill County have for the present entirely ceased, and 400 operators have left. The Commercial says that something should be done at once to put a stop to these outrages, one of the principal leaders in which, it alleges, is a State Senator.

Ex-Senator ROSS has written a letter justifying himself for sending out, under his frank, the card of his son, PITT ROSS, a lad of fifteen, who has recently engaged in bill-posting. The Ex-Senator says he was unable to provide his boy, who did not desire to live in idleness, with the means of engaging in a more lucrative and refined (though not more honorable) business, and that the law explicitly provides that all correspondence to and from a Senator shall be free until the first Monday in December following the expiration of his term of office. He also makes a suggestion of his anticipations thus: "I expect to live to see the day when all the correspondence of the whole people of this country will be as free as is that of members of Congress and officers of the Government now. Every vote of mine in the United States Senate against the abolition of the franking privilege, and they have been many, has been given with that end in view. I sustain and defend the franking privilege as a step in that direction. I see no more reason in taxing the writer of a letter with the cost of its transportation than in taxing a suitor in the United States Courts for the payment of the expenses of that department of the Government. One would be a tax upon the administration of justice—the other is a tax upon the diffusion of knowledge and general information. Neither should have a place in a Government whose greatest safeguards are the general diffusion of intelligence among the people, and the accessibility of the Courts of justice to all."

REAL ESTATE TRANSACTIONS.

Matters at the Exchange yesterday, July 13, were quiet, no sales being effected, and the market was generally dull. In regard to real estate at private sale, there is considerable inquiry for desirable property, and some rumors as to large contracts having been made, with a view to the Fall business. This is probably the case, but as the negotiations are being carried on through brokers who are wise enough to maintain a discreet silence on the subject, it is not probable that the public will become informed of any transfers until the sales are consummated. The cottage residence at Passaic, N. J., offered on Wednesday by A. D. MALLICK, Jr., & BRO., was not sold, and the sale of suburban lots at Flushing, Long Island, embraced in the property known as the "Higgins Nurseries," conducted by E. A. LAWRENCE on the same day, met with but an indifferent success. For today no public auctions are announced of either City or country real estate.

THE SARATOGA RACES.

Startling Effect of the News of the New-York Riot.

Gentlemen Telegraphing Frantically to Their Friends—Slackening in Pool Sales—Indifference of the Butterflies of Fashion —Exciting Races Yesterday.

From Our Special Correspondent.

CONGRESS HALL, SARATOGA, THURSDAY, July 13, 1871.

The overwhelming sensation you have had in New-York has thrown a deep shadow over our festivities here. About 5 o'clock yesterday private telegrams began to arrive thickly from New-York sowing dismay in all directions. Such reports as "Fighting in Fifth-avenue," "The Eighth Regiment fired on," "Thirty rioters killed and eighty wounded," and "Three men of the Ninth Regiment and two of the Seventh Regiment killed," were likely to produce consternation. Three-fourths of the games on the books and people on the piazzas are from the Metropolis, and any explosion there finds a quick and strong reverberation here. Upon gentlemen who have left unprotected families in the City, and there were hundreds of them, the announcement fell with fearful force. Men rushed about the piazzas shouting the terrible announcement and there was a rush of pale-faced people to the telegraph office eager to send messages before the mob should cut the wires. The excitement for an hour or two was tremendous. The patent word "horse," which had been all day the absorbing theme, seemed to have disappeared from the vocabulary. Men gathered in excited knots in the halls and on the piazzas, and talked and raved and shouted in scarlet indignation over nothing but miserable scoundrels who had brought this fearful scourge on the City. I heard nothing but denunciations of the "Ring" and their actions, although I know there was a good sprinkling of Democrats in the crowds.

Of course, there were some people who did no care. In the grand parlor of Congress Hall, three hours after the news came, the crowd of merry-makers were dancing as though death and murder were not digging at the very foundations of the social system which made their butterfly existence possible. It is safe to say that very few men were seen in the parlors, and most of the ladies had to put up with boys or ladies for partners.

A CHECK ON POOL SALES.

The pool sales, which were one cause of the gentlemen's absence, were well attended, but the terrific news was a damper on the sales. The sale of papers about the hotel was the only lively traffic carried on. The whole juvenile male population of the village appeared to be in the service of the Press. All the New-York papers less than twenty hours old went off at ten cents apiece, and the little afternoon paper of the village, containing a mere announcement that fighting had commenced, sold an enormous edition, and got out a supplementary extra, with about the same story, selling numbers of them late into the night.

AN AGREEABLE CHANGE.

Apart from this great disquieting episode, it is, it must be confessed, delightful here. Such weather as that of today and yesterday is an impossibility in the neighborhood of that great brick and stone furnace known as New-York City. The air is inexpressibly balmy, and the heat of the Summer sun is tempered by a cool breeze and half absorbed by the splendid old trees, and both seem to have a wonderfully revivifying influence on city human nature in particular. As we drove by the Congress Springs yesterday the new-mown grass on the smooth slopes of the hills sent up an odor which was a poem in itself. The springs themselves are very pretty, and it is very delightful to get your Congress water fresh for nothing instead of paying 50 cents for it stale. It is wonderfully interesting, also, to look into one of the springs and see it bubbling up into its little artificial well, as full of gas and bubbles and snap as a new-drawn glass of Vichy, and it is interesting to be told that the water in the well is seven feet deep, that the rush of bubbles never slackens, and that the spring is apparently inexhaustible. It is quite soothing when you look at the thing from the 50 cents a bottle point of view.

THE RACES.

The track yesterday was in unimpeachable condition at noon, and the crowd much larger than the day before, the morning train having been so heavy as to require two locomotives to draw it. The grand stand was much more crowded today than yesterday, with a large representation of ladies. Among the gentlemen here are Hon. John A. Griswold, Lieut.-Gov. Beach, and John Appleton, Esq., of D. Appleton & Co. Many on the usual list of celebrities are elsewhere for obvious reasons.

THE STEEPLE-CHASE.

The first race today was the steeple-chase, for all ages, over a course of about three miles, $800 to winner and $300 to second horse. The famous Oysterman, Col. MCDANIEL'S horse; Julius, also from his stable, both bays, and Tammany, a bright chestnut, were the only starters. Oysterman was the favorite at odds of about $100 to $15, Julius being from the same stable and Tammany not standing high. The race raised a good deal of excitement, though it was not in reality a hard struggle, Oysterman being so much superior. Tammany pressed him unexpectedly close, however, and it seemed so probable at one time that he would win the race that considerable more interest was awakened than was shown in any of the struggles of Wednesday. Tammany led off at the start, but Oysterman caught him before he reached the first wall, which the two took together in beautiful style. Julius showing some temper, fell several lengths behind at once, and the race throughout was between Tammany and Oysterman. The long wall and water-jump was magnificently taken by both close together, eliciting rounds of applause from the grand stand. At the last hurdle they were two lengths apart, the favorite ahead. On the home-stretch Tammany drew up, and as they passed the string was only a length behind.

OTHER EVENTS.

In the second race the favorite Eclipticus was all but beaten by Sanford, who sold last in all the pools. Belmont, who sold second, came in a poor third.

In the third race, a three-quarter mile stretch, Orlolan surprised all by coming in ahead of the favorites Grinstead and Felicity, in the remarkable time of 1:17. The races on the whole were a wonderful improvement on those of yesterday, the steeple-chase exciting interest by its romance and novelty among ladies and outsiders, as well as among those not pecuniarily interested.

FIRST RACE.

The first race on the programme for the day was a steeple-chase of about three miles over a fair hunting country, for which there were three entries, Oysterman, Jr., and Julius representing Col. MCDANIEL'S stable, and Tammany entered by JOSEPH DONAHUE. There was not much interest attached to the contest among the connoisseurs, and not even the merest tyro could be found to take the most fabulous odds against the lucky MCDANIEL. The course was well laid out, and reflected credit upon the talented Secretary of the Association, CHAS. WHEATLEY. There were thirty jumps. They were started from the field opposite the grand stand, jumping the first hurdle at the extra or three-quarter stretch, running down parallel to it. Tammany was over first, Oysterman second and Julius third, the latter striking. They then came to a hurdle, all of them going over beautifully in the same positions. The third jump was a wall, Oysterman and Tammany together. Striking the flat, Oysterman took away and led Tammany three lengths over the fourth hurdle. Julius ten lengths behind. The fifth jump was a wall, and they went over it without change of position. On the flat again Tammany closed a length upon Oysterman, and thus they went over the sixth and seventh hurdles, Julius in the meantime getting within three lengths of Tammany, the pace being very slow. The eighth jump was a stone wall, and going over it Tammany leaped beautifully, and got within a length of Oysterman, Julius having got within a length of Tammany. On the flat again, Oysterman got two lengths away from Tammany, and led that over the ninth, tenth and eleventh obstacles, which were a hedge, a water jump and a hurdle. They now entered the course on the three-quarter stretch, and Oysterman got three lengths away from Tammany, with Julius two lengths behind the latter. Entering the lead again, they came to a fence, and her only son HENRY a few years since. By the death of the latter she obtained upon a life insurance policy $20,000. Rumors have been started prejudical to the accused in connection with their deaths, but nothing of that character has been proved, and they have no connection with the present case, which will be laid before the Grand Jury on Saturday next.

"The evidence in part in the case of Mr. EUGENE VAN NESS, said to be in the possession of the authorities, is, that while on a visit to the residence of the accused, on the 24th of June, he drank a glass of beer, after pouring into it a few drops of tincture of gentian. He was immediately taken ill, and carried to a bed-chamber, where he was attended by Dr. S. C. CHEW, and also by Mrs. VAN NESS, his wife, until the Friday following, when he was removed to his home. Also that a glass of beer directly from the hands of the accused, was offered Mr. VAN NESS, and laid aside, that its contents were afterwards subjected to chemical examination, and found to contain fifteen grains of tartar-emetic; tartar-emetic is an antimonial poison composed of tartrate of potassa and antimony, ten or fifteen grains of which will produce death; this occurred on the 26th of June, the day of Gen. KETCHUM'S death, in the same house; Dr. WILLIAMS communicated these facts to the Marshal of Police and to the brother-in-law of Gen. KETCHUM, Fay-master-General BRICE, at whose instance a post-mortem examination was made of the stomach of deceased, resulting in the discovery of twenty grains of tartar-emetic; this quantity remained after the continued vomitings of the deceased.

Mrs. WHARTON, before her marriage, was Miss ELIZABETH G. NUGENT, of Philadelphia, and is a sister of Dr. NUGENT, now a prominent physician of Pittston, Penn. Her daughter, who was to have sailed with her mother yesterday to Europe, is said to be a very interesting young lady, and is suffering deep affliction from the occurrence of the tragical events around her, but she is in no way implicated in any of the charges made against her mother. Mrs. WHARTON, it is said, made persevering endeavors to obtain permission to proceed on her projected voyage to Europe, but was finally informed that she ought to see the propriety and necessity of remaining in this city, within the jurisdiction of the Court, until the charges against her were disposed of. It is also stated that she received information of the charge without manifesting any unusual excitement. Her friends insist that there is no evidence which will sustain the charges against her."

The Hallucinations of a Lunatic.

There is confined in the Bayonne Police Station, since yesterday, a crazy man who gives his name as CONRAD AHRENS, recently of St. Louis. He was captured in the woods by the Police, and his appearance represents not a little the semi-barbarian. This lunatic has very philosophic, but fictitious ideas. He believes himself the man who furnishes the rain, and he was resolved to make a contract with the farmers to supply them with what rain they required for a reasonable compensation. As to his being there, he told the Police he had chosen Newark Bay as a place well adapted for taking a cooly sea-bath. He further ventured to assert that shortly before he left St. Louis he purchased the territory of an Indian tribe at $16 per acre. He intended governing it after his own fashion, if he could not sell it for $18. This rara avis awaits an investigation by the county physician.

Pigeon-Shooting at Greenville.

Two matches at pigeon-shooting (sweepstakes) took place at Greenville, yesterday, at which some good markesmanship was shown. In the first match five birds were shot at, each by HEPSLEY, RIERSON and TAYLOR. The first and last killed every bird and fired off their tie, TAYLOR winning by 5 to 4. The next match was by TAYLOR, TULGER and PIERSON, TAYLOR and TULGER making a tie, when it was agreed that each should fire until he missed a bird. TAYLOR shot first, making 29 birds, and missing the thirtieth, when TULGER brought down 30 straight birds.

MARY CUNNINGHAM was overcome by the heat, yesterday, at the corner of Chambers-street and College-place, and was cared for by the Police.
